This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

THE pleaſure Dean Swift's Works have already afforded will be a ſufficient apology for communicating to the Reader, tho' ſomewhat out of ſeaſon, theſe Additional Volumes; who will be leſs diſpleaſed, that they have been ſo long ſuppreſſed, than thankful that they are now at laſt publiſhed. We have no occaſion to apologize for the Pieces themſelves; for as they have all the internal marks of genuineneſs, ſo, by their further opening the author's private correſpondence, they diſplay the goodneſs of his heart, no leſs than the never-ceaſing ſallies of his wit. His anſwer to The Rights of the Chriſtian church is a remarkable inſtance of both; which, though unfiniſhed, and but the ſlight proluſions of his ſtrength, ſhew how ſincere, how able a champion he was of religion and the church. So ſoon as theſe were printed in Dublin, in a new edition of the Dean's works, it was a juſtice due to them to ſelect them thence, to complete the London edition. Like the author, though they owe their birth to Ireland, they will feel their maturity in England; and each nation will contend which ſhall receive them with greater ardour.

We have added, in the laſt Volume, an Index to ALL the WORKS; wherein we have ranged the bons mots ſcattered throughout them under the article SWIFTIANA, by which their brightneſs is collected, as it were, into a focus, and they are placed in ſuch open day, that they are ſecured, for the future, from the pretty larceny of meaner wits.

FALSE WITNESS.

EXODUS XX. 16.

Thou ſhalt not bear falſe Witneſs againſt thy Neighbour.

IN thoſe great changes that are made in a country, by the prevailing of one party over another, it is very convenient that the prince, and thoſe who are in authority under him, ſhould uſe all juſt and proper methods for preventing any miſchief to the public from ſeditious men. And Governors do well, when they encourage any good ſubject to diſcover (as his duty obligeth him) whatever plots or conſpiracies may be any way dangerous to the ſtate: Neither are they to be blamed, even when they receive informations from bad men, in order to find out the truth, when it concerns the public welfare. Every one indeed is naturally inclined to have an ill opinion of an informer; although it is not impoſſible, but an honeſt man may be called by that name. For whoever knoweth any thing, the telling of which would prevent ſome great evil to his prince, his country, or his neighbour, is bound in conſcience to reveal it. But the miſchief is, that when parties are violently enflamed, which ſeemeth unfortunately to be our caſe at preſent, there is never wanting a ſett of evil inſtruments, who, either out of mad zeal, private hatred, or filthy lucre, are always ready to offer their ſervice to the prevailing ſide, and become accuſers of their brethren without any regard to truth or charity. Holy David numbers this among the chief of his ſufferings; Falſe Witneſſes are riſen up againſt me, and ſuch as breath out Cruelty [a]. Our Saviour and his apoſtles did likewiſe undergo the ſame diſtreſs, as we read both in the Goſpels and the Acts.

Now

Now becauſe t : ſin of falſe witneſſing is ſo horrible and dangerous in itſelf, and ſo odious to God and man: And becauſe the bitterneſs of too many among us is riſen to ſuch a height, that it is not eaſy to know where it will ſtop, or how far ſome weak and wicked minds may be carried by a miſtaken zeal, a malicious temper, or hope of reward, to break this great commandment delivered in the text: Therefore, in order to prevent this evil, and the conſequences of it, at leaſt among you who are my hearers, I ſhall,

I. First, Shew you ſeveral ways by which a man may be called a falſe witneſs againſt his neighbour.

II. Secondly, I ſhall give you ſome rules for your conduct and behaviour, in order to defend yourſelves againſt the malice and cunning of falſe accuſers.

III. And laſtly, I ſhall conclude with ſhewing you very briefly, how far it is your duty, as good ſubjects and good neighbours, to bear faithful witneſs, when you are lawfully called to it by thoſe in authority, or by the ſincere advice of your own conſciences.

I. As to the firſt, there are ſeveral ways by which a man may be juſtly called a falſe witneſs againſt his neighbour.

Firſt, According to the direct meaning of the word, when a man accuſeth his neighbour without the leaſt ground of truth. So we read, that Jezabel hired two ſons of Belial to accuſe Naboth for blaſpheming God and the King, for which, although he was entirely innocent, he was ſtoned to death [b]. And in our age it is not eaſy to tell how many men have loſt their lives, been ruined in their fortunes, and put to ignominious puniſhment by the downright perjury of falſe witneſſes! The law itſelf in ſuch caſes being not able to protect the innocent. But this is ſo horrible a crime, that it doth not need to be aggravated by words.

A ſecond way by which a man becometh a falſe witneſs is, when he mixeth falſehood and truth together, or concealeth

ſome circumſtance which, if they were told, would deſtroy the falſhoods he uttereth. So the two falſe witneſſes who accuſed our Saviour before the chief Prieſts, by a very little perverting his words, would have made him guilty of a capital crime; for ſo it was among the Jews to propheſy any evil againſt the temple. This fellow ſaid, I am able to deſtroy the temple of God, and to build it in three days [c]; whereas the words, as our Saviour ſpoke them, were to another end, and differently expreſſed: For when the Jews aſked him to ſhew them a ſign, he ſaid; Deſtroy this temple, and in three days I will raiſe it up. In ſuch caſes as theſe, an innocent man is half confounded, and looketh as if he were guilty, ſince he neither can deny his words, nor perhaps readily ſtrip them from the malicious additions of a falſe witneſs.

Thirdly, A man is a falſe witneſs, when, in accuſing his neighbour, he endeavoureth to aggravate by his geſtures, and tone of his voice, or when he chargeth a man with words which were only repeated or quoted from ſomebody elſe. As if any one ſhould tell me that he heard another ſpeak certain dangerous and ſeditious ſpeeches, and I ſhould immediately accuſe him for ſpeaking them himſelf; and ſo drop the only circumſtance that made him innocent. This was the caſe of St. Stephen. The falſe witneſſes ſaid, This man ceaſeth not to ſpeak blaſphemous words againſt this holy place and the law [d]. Whereas St. Stephen ſaid no ſuch words; but only repeated ſome propheſies of Jeremiah or Malachi, which threatened Jeruſalem with deſtruction if it did not repent: However, by the fury of the people, this innocent holy perſon was ſtoned to death for words he never ſpoke.

Fourthly, The blackeſt kind of falſe witneſſes are thoſe who do the office of the Devil, by tempting their brethren in order to betray them. I cannot call to mind any inſtances of this kind mentioned in holy ſcripture. But I am afraid, this vile practice hath been too much followed in the world. When a man's temper hath been ſo ſoured by misfortunes and hard

uſage, that perh he h h reaſon enough to complain; then one of theſe ſeducers, under the pretence of friendſhip, will ſeem to lament his caſe, urge the hardſhips he hath ſuffered, and endeavour to raiſe his paſſions until he hath ſaid ſomething that a malicious informer can pervert or aggravate againſt him in a court of juſtice.

Fifthly, Whoever beareth witneſs againſt his neighbour, out of a principle of malice and revenge, from any old grudge, or hatred to his perſon; ſuch a man is a falſe witneſs in the ſight of God, although what he ſays be true; becauſe the motive or cauſe is evil, not to ſerve his prince or country, but to gratify his own reſentments. And therefore, although a man thus accuſed may be very juſtly puniſhed by the law, yet this doth by no means acquit the accuſer, who, inſtead of regarding the public ſervice, intended only to glut his private rage and ſpight.

Sixthly, I number among falſe witneſſes all thoſe who make a trade of being informers in hope of favour and reward; and to this end employ their time, either by liſtening in public places, to catch up an accidental word; or in corrupting men's ſervants to diſcover any unwary expreſſion of their maſter; or thruſting themſelves into company, and then uſing the moſt indecent ſcurrilous language; faſtening a thouſand falſhoods and ſcandal upon a whole party, on purpoſe to provoke ſuch an anſwer as they may turn to an accuſation. And truly this ungodly race is ſaid to be grown ſo numerous, that men of different parties can hardly converſe together with any ſecurity. Even the pulpit hath not been free from the miſrepreſentation of theſe informers; of whom the clergy have not wanted occaſions to complain with holy David: They daily miſtake my words, all they imagine is to do me evil. Nor is it any wonder at all, that this trade of informing ſhould be now in a flouriſhing condition, ſince our caſe is manifeſtly thus: We are divided into two parties, with very little charity or temper towards each other: The prevailing ſide may talk of paſt things as they pleaſe, with ſecurity; and generally do it in the moſt provoking words they can invent; while thoſe who are down are

ſometimes tempted to ſpeak in favour of a loſt cauſe, and therefore, without great caution, muſt needs be often caught tripping, and thereby furniſh plenty of materials for witneſſes and informers.

Laſtly, Thoſe may well be reckoned among falſe witneſſes againſt their neighbour, who bring him into trouble and puniſhment by ſuch accuſations as are of no conſequence at all to the public, nor can be of any other uſe but to create vexation. Such witneſſes are thoſe, who cannot hear an idle intemperate expreſſion, but they muſt immediately run to the magiſtrate to inform; or perhaps wrangling in their cups over night, when they were not able to ſpeak or apprehend three words of common ſenſe, will pretend to remember every thing in the morning, and think themſelves very properly qualified to be accuſers of their brethren. God be thanked, the throne of our [e] king is too firmly ſettled to be ſhaken by the folly and raſhneſs of every ſottiſh companion. And I do not in the leaſt doubt, that when thoſe in power begin to obſerve the falſhood, the prevarication, the aggravating manner, the treachery and ſeducing, the malice and revenge, the love of lucre; and laſtly, the trifling accuſations in too many wicked people, they will be as ready to diſcourage every ſort of thoſe whom I have numbered among falſe witneſſes, as they will be to countenance honeſt men, who, out of a true zeal to their prince and country, do, in the innocence of their hearts, freely diſcover whatever they may apprehend to be dangerous to either. A good chriſtian will think it ſufficient to reprove his brother for a raſh unguarded word, where there is neither danger nor evil example to be apprehended; or, if he will not amend by reproof, avoid his converſation.

II. And thus much may ſerve to ſhew the ſeveral ways whereby a man may be ſaid to be a falſe witneſs againſt his neighbour. I might have added one kind more, and it is of thoſe who inform againſt their neighbour out of fear of puniſhment to themſelves, which, although it be more excuſable, and hath leſs of malice than any of the reſt, cannot however be juſtified. I go on therefore upon the ſecond head, to give you ſome rules for your conduct and behaviour, in order to defend yourſelves againſt the malice and cunning of falſe accuſers.

It is readily agreed, that innocence is the beſt protection in the world; yet that it is not always ſufficient without ſome degree of prudence, our Saviour himſelf intimateth to us, by inſtructing his diſciples to be wiſe as ſerpents, as well as innocent as doves. But, if ever innocence be too weak a defence, it is chiefly ſo in jealous and ſuſpicious times, when factions are arrived to an high pitch of animoſity, and the minds of men, inſtead of being warmed by a true zeal for religion, are inflamed only by party fury. Neither is virtue itſelf a ſufficient ſecurity in ſuch times, becauſe it is not allowed to be virtue, otherwiſe than as it hath a mixture of party.

However, although virtue and innocence are no infallible defence againſt perjury, malice, and ſubornation, yet they are great ſupports for enabling us to bear

thoſe evils with temper and reſignation; and it is an unſpeakable comfort to a good man under the malignity of evil mercenary tongues, that a few years will carry his appeal to an higher tribunal, where falſe witneſſes, inſtead of daring to bring accuſations before an all-ſeeing judge, will call for mountains to cover them. As for earthly judges, they ſeldom have it in their power; and, God knows, whether they have it in their will, to mingle mercy with juſtice; they are ſo far from knowing the hearts of the accuſer or the accuſed, that they cannot know their own; and their underſtanding is frequently biaſſed, although their intentions be juſt. They are often prejudiced to cauſes, parties, and perſons, through the infirmity of human nature, without being ſenſible themſelves that they are ſo: And therefore, although God may pardon their errors here, he certainly will not ratify their ſentences hereafter.

However, ſince, as we have before obſerved, our Saviour preſcribeth to us to be not only harmleſs as doves, but wiſe as ſerpents; give me leave to preſcribe to you ſome ſome rules, whi the r : ignorant perſon may follow for the conduct of his life with ſafety in perilous times againſt falſe accuſers.

1*ſt*, Let me adviſe you to have nothing at all to do with that which is commonly called politics, or the government of the world; in the nature of which it is certain you are utterly ignorant, and when your opinion is wrong, although it proceeds from ignorance, it ſhall be an accuſation againſt you. Beſides, opinions in government are right or wrong juſt according to the humour and diſpoſition of the times; and, unleſs you have judgment to diſtinguiſh, you may be puniſhed at one time for what you would be rewarded in another.

2dly, Be ready at all times in your words and actions to ſhew your loyalty to the king that reigns over you. This is the plain manifeſt doctrine of holy ſcripture. Submit yourſelves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's ſake, whether it be to the king as ſupreme, &c [f]. And another apoſtle telleth us, The powers that be

are ordained of God. Kings are the ordinances of man by the permiſſion of God, and they are ordained of God by his inſtrument man. The powers that be, the preſent powers, which are ordained by God, and yet in ſome ſenſe are the ordinances of man, are what you muſt obey, without preſuming to examine into rights and titles; neither can it be reaſonably expected, that the powers in being, or in poſſeſſion, ſhould ſuffer their title to be publicly diſputed by ſubjects without ſevere puniſhment. And to ſay the truth, there is no duty in religion more eaſy to the generality of mankind, than obedience to government: I ſay, to the generality of mankind; becauſe while their law, and property, and religion are preſerved, it is of no great conſequence to them by whom they are governed, and therefore they are under no temptations to deſire a change.

3*dly*, In order to prevent any danger from the malice of falſe witneſſes, be ſure to avoid intemperance. If it be often ſo hard for men to govern their tongues when they are in their right ſenſes, how can they hope [illegible] hen they are heated with dri[illegible]? In thoſe caſes moſt men regard not [illegible]at they ſay, and too many not what they ſwear; neither will a man's memory diſordered with drunkenneſs ſerve to defend himſelf, or ſatisfy him whether he were guilty or no.

4thly, Avoid, as much as poſſible, the converſation of thoſe people, who are given to talk of public perſons and affairs, eſpecially of thoſe whoſe opinions in ſuch matters are different from yours. I never once knew any diſputes of this kind managed with tolerable temper; but on both ſides they only agree as much as poſſible to provoke the paſſions of each other, indeed with this diſadvantage, that he who argueth on the ſide of power may ſpeak ſecurely the utmoſt his malice can invent; while the other lieth every moment at the mercy of an informer; and the law in theſe caſes will give no allowance at all for paſſion, inadvertency, or the higheſt provocation.

I come now in the laſt place to ſhew you how far it is your duty as good ſubjects and good neighbours to bear faithful

witneſs, when you are lawfully called to it by thoſe in authority, or by the ſincere advice of your own conſciences.

In what I have hitherto ſaid, you eaſily find, that I do not talk of bearing witneſs in general, which is and may be lawful upon a thouſand accounts in relation to property and other matters, and wherein there are many ſcandalous corruptions, almoſt peculiar to this country, which would require to be handled by themſelves. But I have confined my diſcourſe only to that branch of bearing falſe witneſs, whereby the public is injured in the ſafety or honour of the prince, or thoſe in authority under him.

In order therefore to be a faithful witneſs, it is firſt neceſſary that a man doth not undertake it from the leaſt proſpect of any private advantage to himſelf. The ſmalleſt mixture of that leaven will ſour the whole lump. Intereſt will infallibly bias his judgment, although he be ever ſo firmly reſolved to ſay nothing but truth. He cannot ſerve God and Mammon; but as intereſt is his chief end, he will uſe the moſt effectual means to advance it. He will aggravate circumſtances to make his teſtimony valuable; he will be ſorry if the perſon he accuſeth ſhould be able to clear himſelf; in ſhort, he is labouring a point which he thinks neceſſary to his own good; and it would be a diſappointment to him, that his neighbour ſhould prove innocent.

5thly, Every good ſubject is obliged to bear witneſs againſt his neighbour, for any action or words, the telling of which would be of advantage to the public, and the concealment dangerous, or of ill example. Of this nature are all plots and conſpiracies againſt the peace of a nation, all diſgraceful words againſt a prince, ſuch as clearly diſcover a diſloyal and rebellious heart: but where our prince and country can poſſibly receive no damage or diſgrace; where no ſcandal or ill example is given; and our neighbour, it may be, provoked by us, happeneth privately to drop a raſh or indiſcreet word, which in ſtrictneſs of law might bring him under trouble, perhaps to his utter undoing; there we are obliged, we ought, to proceed no further than warning and reproof.

In deſcribing to you the ſeveral kinds of falſe witneſſes, I have made it leſs neceſſary to dwell much longer upon this head; becauſe a faithful witneſs, like every thing elſe, is known by his contrary: Therefore it would be only repetition of what I have already ſaid to tell you, that the ſtricteſt truth is required in a witneſs; that he ſhould be wholy free from the malice againſt the perſon he accuſes; that he ſhould not aggravate the ſmalleſt circumſtance againſt the criminal, nor conceal the ſmalleſt in his favour; and, to crown all, though I have hinted it before, that the only cauſe or motive of his undertaking an office, ſo ſubject to cenſure, and ſo difficult to perform, ſhould be the ſafety and ſervice of his prince and country.

Under theſe conditions and limitations (but not otherwiſe) there is no manner of doubt, but a good man may lawfully and juſtly become a witneſs in behalf of the public, and may perform that office (in its own nature not very deſirable) with honour and integrity. For the command in the text is poſitive as well as negative; that is to ſay, as we are directed not to bear falſe witneſs againſt our neighbour, ſo we are to bear true. Next to the word of God, and the advice of teachers, every man's conſcience ſtrictly examined will be his beſt director in this weighty point; and to that I ſhall leave him.

It might perhaps be thought proper to have added ſomething by way of advice to thoſe who are unhappily engaged in this abominable trade and ſin of bearing falſe witneſs; but I am far from believing or ſuppoſing any of that deſtructive tribe are now my hearers. I look upon them as a ſort of people that ſeldom frequent theſe holy places, where they can hardly pick up any materials to ſerve their turn, unleſs they think it worth their while to miſrepreſent or pervert the words of the preacher: And whoever is that way diſpoſed, I doubt, cannot be in a very good condition to edify and reform himſelf by what he heareth. God in his mercy preſerve us from all the guilt of this grievous ſin forbidden in my text, and from the ſnares of thoſe who are guilty of it.

I ſhall conclude with one or two precepts given by Moſes from God to the children of Iſrael, in the xxiii[d] of Exod. 1, 2.

Thou ſhalt not raiſe a falſe report: Put not thine hand with the wicked, to be an unrighteous witneſs.

Thou ſhalt not follow a multitude to do evil, neither ſhalt thou ſpeak in a cauſe to decline after many, to wreſt judgment.

Now to God the Father, &c.

A SER-

Poor Man's Contentment.

PHILIP. Chap. iv. Part of the 11th Verſe.

I have learned, in whatſoever ſtate I am, therewith to be content.

THE holy ſcripture is full of expreſſions to ſet forth the miſerable condition of man during the whole progreſs of his life; his weakneſs, pride, and vanity, his unmeaſurable deſires, and perpetual diſappointments, the prevalency of his paſſions, and the corruptions of his reaſon, his deluding hopes, and his real, as well as imaginary fears; his natural and artificial wants; his cares and anxieties; the diſeaſes of his body, and the diſeaſes of his mind; the ſhortneſs of his life; his dread of a future ſtate, with his careleſsneſs to prepare for it: And the wiſe men of all ages have made the ſame reflexions.

But all theſe are general calamities, from which none are excepted; and, being without remedy, it is vain to bewail them. The great queſtion, long debated in the world, is, whether the rich or the poor are the leaſt miſerable of the two? It is certain, that no rich man ever deſired to be poor, and that moſt, if not all, poor men deſire to be rich; from whence it may be argued, that, in all appearance, the advantage lieth on the ſide of wealth, becauſe both parties agree in preferring it before poverty. But this reaſoning will be found to be falſe: For, I lay it down as a certain truth, that God Almighty hath placed all men upon an equal foot, with reſpect to their happineſs in this world, and the capacity of attaining their ſalvation in the next; or, at leaſt, if there be any difference, it is not to the advantage of the rich and the mighty. Now, ſince a great part of thoſe, who uſually make up our congregations, are not of conſiderable ſtation, and many among them of the lower ſort, and ſince the meaner people are generally, and juſtly, charged with the ſin of repining and murmuring at their own condition, to which, however, their betters are ſufficiently ſubject, (although, perhaps, for ſhame, not always ſo loud in their complaints) I thought it might be uſeful to reaſon upon this point in as plain a manner as I can. I ſhall therefore ſhew, firſt, that the poor enjoy many temporal bleſſings, which are not common to the rich and the great: And, likewiſe, that the rich and the great are ſubject to many temporal evils, which are not common to the poor.

But here I would not be miſunderſtood; perhaps, there is not a word more abuſed than that of the poor, or wherein the world is more generally miſtaken. Among the number of thoſe who beg in our ſtreets, or are half ſtarved at home, or languiſh in priſon for debt, there is hardly one in a hundred who doth not owe his misfortunes to his own lazineſs or drunkenneſs, or worſe vices.

To theſe he owes thoſe very diſeaſes which often diſable him from getting his bread. Such wretches are deſervedly unhappy; they can only blame themſelves; and when we are commanded to have pity on the poor, theſe are not underſtood to be of the number.

It is true, indeed, that ſometimes honeſt, endeavouring men are reduced to extreme want, even to the begging of alms, by loſſes, by accidents, by diſeaſes, and old age, without any fault of their own: But theſe are very few, in compariſon of the other; nor would their ſupport be any ſenſible burthen to the public, if the charity of well-diſpoſed perſons were not intercepted by thoſe common ſtrolers, who are moſt importunate, and who leaſt deſerve it. Theſe, indeed, are properly and juſtly called the poor, whom it ſhould be our ſtudy to find out and diſtinguiſh, by making them partake of our ſuperfluity and abundance.

But neither have theſe any thing to do with my preſent ſubject: For, by the poor I only intend the honeſt, induſtrious artificer, the meaner ſort of tradeſmen, and the labouring man, who getteth his bread by the ſweat of his brows, in town or country, and who make the bulk of mankind among us.

Firſt, I ſhall therefore ſhew, firſt, that the poor (in the ſenſe I underſtand the word) do enjoy many temporal bleſſings, which are not common to the rich and great; and likewiſe, that the rich and great are ſubject to many temporal evils, which are not common to the poor.

Secondly, From the arguments offered to prove the foregoing head, I ſhall draw ſome obſervations that may be uſeful for your practice.

1. As to the firſt: Health, we know, is generally allowed to be the beſt of all earthly poſſeſſions, becauſe it is that, without which we can have no ſatiſfaction in any of the reſt. For riches are of no uſe, if ſickneſs taketh from us the ability of enjoying them, and power and greatneſs are then only a burthen. Now, if we would look for health, it muſt be in the humble habitation of the labouring man, or induſtrious artificer, who earn their bread by the ſweat of their brows, brows, and uſually live to a good old age with a great degree of ſtrength and vigour.

The refreſhment of the body by ſleep is another great happineſs of the meaner ſort. Their reſt is not diſturbed by the fear of thieves and robbers, nor is it interrupted by ſurfeits of intemperance. Labour and plain food ſupply the want of quieting draughts; and the wiſe man telleth us, that the ſleep of the labouring man is ſweet. As to children, which are certainly accounted of as a bleſſing, even to the poor, where induſtry is not wanting; they are an aſſiſtance to their honeſt parents, inſtead of being a burthen; they are healthy and ſtrong, and fit for labour; neither is the father in fear, leſt his heir ſhould be ruined by an unequal match; nor is he ſolicitous about his riſing in the world, further than to be able to get his bread.

The poorer ſort are not the objects of general hatred or envy; they have no twinges of ambition, nor trouble themſelves with party-quarrels, or ſtate-diviſions. The idle rabble, who follow their ambitious ambitious leaders in ſuch caſes, do not fall within my deſcription of the poorer ſort; for, it is plain, I mean only the honeſt induſtrious poor in town or country, who are ſafeſt in times of public diſturbance, in perilous ſeaſons, and public revolutions, if they will be quiet, and do their own buſineſs: For artificers and huſbandmen are neceſſary in all governments: But, in ſuch ſeaſons, the rich are the public mark, becauſe they are oftentimes of no uſe, but to be plundered; like ſome ſort of birds, who are good for nothing, but their feathers; and ſo fall a prey to the ſtrongeſt ſide.

Let us proceed on the other ſide to examine the diſadvantages that the rich and the great lie under, with reſpect to the happineſs of the preſent life.

Firſt then; While health, as we have ſaid, is the general portion of the lower ſort, the gout, the dropſy, the ſtone, the colic, and all other diſeaſes, are continually haunting the palaces of the rich and the great, as the natural attendants upon lazineſs and luxury. Neither does the rich man eat his ſumptuous fare with half the appetite and reliſh, that even the beggars do the crumbs which fall from his table: But, on the contrary, he is full of loathing and diſguſt, or at beſt of indifference, in the midſt of plenty. Thus their intemperance ſhortens their lives, without pleaſing their appetites.

Buſineſs, fear, guilt, deſign, anguiſh, and vexation are continually buzzing about the curtains of the rich and the powerful, and will hardly ſuffer them to cloſe their eyes, unleſs when they are dozed with the fumes of ſtrong liquors.

It is a great miſtake to imagine, that the rich want but few things; their wants are more numerous, more craving, and urgent, than thoſe of poorer men: For theſe endeavour only at the neceſſaries of life, which make them happy, and they think no farther: But the deſire of power and wealth is endleſs, and therefore impoſſible to be ſatisfied with any acquiſitions.

If riches were ſo great a bleſſing as they are commonly thought, they would at leaſt have this advantage, to give their owners chearful hearts and countenances; they

they would often ſtir them up to expreſs their thankfulneſs to God, and diſcover their ſatisfaction to the world. But, in fact, the contrary to all this is true. For where are there more cloudy brows, more melancholy hearts, or more ingratitude to their great Benefactor, than among thoſe who abound in wealth? And, indeed, it is natural that it ſhould be ſo, becauſe thoſe men, who covet things that are hard to be got, muſt be hard to pleaſe; whereas a ſmall thing maketh a poor man happy; and great loſſes cannot befal him.

It is likewiſe worth conſidering, how few among the rich have procured their wealth by juſt meaſures; how many owe their fortunes to the ſins of their parents, how many more to their own? If men's titles were to be tried before a true court of conſcience, where falſe ſwearing, and a thouſand vile artifices, (that are well known, and can hardly be avoided in human courts of juſtice) would avail nothing; how many would be ejected with infamy and diſgrace? How many grow conſiderable by breach of truſt, by bribery and and corruption? How many have ſold their religion, with the rights and liberties of themſelves and others, for power and employments?

And, it is a miſtake to think, that the moſt hardened ſinner, who oweth his poſſeſſions or titles to any ſuch wicked arts of thieving, can have true peace of mind, under the reproaches of a guilty conſcience, and amidſt the cries of ruined widows and orphans.

I know not one real advantage that the rich have over the poor, except the power of doing good to others: But this is an advantage which God hath not given wicked men the grace to make uſe of. The wealth acquired by evil means was never employed to good ends; for that would be to divide the kingdom of Satan againſt itſelf. Whatever hath been gained by fraud, avarice, oppreſſion, and the like, muſt be preſerved and increaſed by the ſame methods.

I ſhall add but one thing more upon this head, which I hope will convince you, that God (whoſe thoughts are not as our thoughts) never intended riches or power power to be neceſſary for the happineſs of mankind in this life; becauſe it is certain, that there is not one ſingle good quality of the mind abſolutely neceſſary to obtain them, where men are reſolved to be rich at any rate; neither honour, juſtice, temperance, wiſdom, religion, truth, nor learning; for a ſlight acquaintance with the world will inform us, that there have been many inſtances of men in all ages, who have arrived at great poſſeſſions and great dignities, by cunning, fraud, or flattery, without any of theſe, or any other virtues that can be named. Now, if riches and greatneſs were ſuch bleſſings, that good men without them could not have their ſhare of happineſs in this life; how cometh it to paſs, that God ſhould ſuffer them to be often dealt to the worſt, and moſt profligate of mankind? that they ſhould be generally procured by the moſt abominable means, and applied to the baſeſt and moſt wicked uſes? This ought not to be conceived of a juſt, a merciful, a wiſe, and almighty Being. We muſt therefore conclude, that wealth and power are in their own own nature, at beſt, but things indifferent, and that a good man may be equally happy without them, provided that he hath a ſufficiency of the common bleſſings of human life to anſwer all the reaſonable and virtuous demands of nature, which his induſtry will provide, and ſobriety will prevent his wanting. Agur's prayer, with the reaſons of his wiſh, are full to this purpoſe: "Give me neither "poverty nor riches. Feed me with "food convenient for me; leſt I be full "and deny thee, and ſay, Who is the "Lord? Or, leſt I be poor, and ſteal, "and take the Name of my God in "vain."

From what hath been ſaid, I ſhall, in the ſecond place, offer ſome conſiderations, that may be uſeful for your practice.

And here I ſhall apply myſelf chiefly to thoſe of the lower ſort, for whoſe comfort and ſatisfaction this diſcourſe is principally intended. For, having obſerved the great ſin of thoſe, who do not abound in wealth, to be that of murmuring and repining, that God hath dealt his is bleſſings unequally to the ſons of nen, I thought it would be of great uſe o remove out of your minds ſo falſe and vicked an opinion, by ſhewing that your ondition is really happier than moſt of ou imagine.

Firſt, therefore, it hath been always greed in the world, that the preſent hapineſs of mankind conſiſted in the eaſe f our body and the quiet of our mind; ut, from what hath been already ſaid, it lainly appears, that neither wealth nor ower do in any ſort contribute to either f theſe two bleſſings. If, on the conrary, by multiplying our deſires, they inreaſe our diſcontents; if they deſtroy ur health, gall us with painful diſeaſes, nd ſhorten our life; if they expoſe us o hatred, to envy, to cenſure, to a thouand temptations, it is not eaſy to ſee vhy a wiſe man ſhould make them his hoice, for their own ſake, although it vere in his power. Would any of you, vho are in health and ſtrength of body, vith moderate food and raiment earned y your own labour, rather chuſe to be n the rich man's bed, under the torture of the gout, unable to take your natural reſt, or natural nouriſhment, with the additional load of a guilty conſcience, reproaching you for injuſtice, oppreſſions, covetouſneſs, and fraud? No; but you would take the riches and power, and leave behind the inconveniences that attend them; and ſo would every man living. But that is more than our ſhare, and God never intended this world for ſuch a place of reſt as we would make it; for the ſcripture aſſureth us, that it was only deſigned as a place of trial. Nothing is more frequent, than a man to wiſh himſelf in another's condition; yet he ſeldom doth it without ſome reſerve: He would not be ſo old; he would not be ſo ſickly; he would not be ſo cruel; he would not be ſo inſolent; he would not be ſo vicious; he would not be ſo oppreſſive; ſo griping; and ſo on. From whence it is plain, that, in their own judgment, men are not ſo unequally dealt with, as they would at firſt ſight imagine: For, if I would not change my condition with another man, without any exception xception or reſervation at all, I am in eality more happy than he.

Secondly, You of the meaner ſort are ubject to fewer temptations than the ich; and therefore your vices are more npardonable. Labour ſubdueth your ppetites to be ſatisfied with common hings; the buſineſs of your ſeveral call-ngs filleth up your whole time; ſo that dleneſs, which is the bane and deſtruc-ion of virtue, doth not lead you into the eighbourbood of ſin: Your paſſions are ooler, by not being inflamed with exceſs, nd therefore the gate and the way that ead to life are not ſo ſtrait or ſo narrow o you, as to thoſe who live among all he allurements to wickedneſs. To ſerve God with the beſt of your care and un-lerſtanding, and to be juſt and true in our dealings, is the ſhort ſum of your luty, and will be the more ſtrictly re-uired of you, becauſe nothing lieth in the vay to divert you from it.

Thirdly, It is plain from what I have aid, that you of the lower rank have no uſt reaſon to complain of your condition; ecauſe, as you plainly ſee, it affordeth you ſo many advantages, and freeth you from ſo many vexations, ſo many diſtempers both of body and mind, which purſue and torment the rich and powerful.

Fourthly, You are to remember and apply, that the pooreſt perſon is not excuſed from doing good to others, and even relieving the wants of his diſtreſſed neighbour, according to his abilities; and if you perform your duty in this point, you far outdo the greateſt liberalities of the rich, and will accordingly be accepted of by God, and get your reward: For, it is our Saviour's own doctrine, when the widow gave her two mites. The rich give out of their abundance; that is to ſay, what they give, they do not feel it in their way of living: But the poor man, who giveth out of his little ſtock, muſt ſpare it from the neceſſary food and raiment of himſelf and his family. And therefore our Saviour adds, "That the "widow gave more than all who went "before her; for ſhe gave all ſhe had, "even all her living;" and ſo went home

Laſtly, As it appeareth from what hath been ſaid, that you of the lower rank have, in reality, a greater ſhare of happineſs, your work of ſalvation is eaſier, by your being liable to fewer temptations; and as your reward in heaven is much more certain, than it is to the rich, if you ſeriouſly perform your duty, for yours is the kingdom of heaven; ſo your neglect of it will be leſs excuſeable, will meet with fewer allowances, from God, and will be puniſhed with double ſtripes. For, the moſt unknowing among you cannot plead ignorance in what you have been ſo early taught, I hope, ſo often inſtructed in, and which is ſo eaſy to be underſtood, I mean the art of leading a life agreeable to the plan and poſitive laws of God. Perhaps you may think you lie under one diſadvantage, which the great and rich have not; that idleneſs will certainly reduce you to beggary; whereas thoſe who abound in wealth lie under no neceſſity either of labour or temperance to keep enough to live on. But this is indeed one part of your happineſs, that the lowneſs of your condition, in a manner, forceth you to what is pleaſing to God, and neceſſary for your daily ſupport. Thus your duty and intereſt are always the ſame.

To conclude; ſince our bleſſed Lord, who, inſtead of a rich and honourable ſtation in this world, was pleaſed to chuſe his lot among men of the lower condition; let not thoſe, on whom the bounty of providence hath beſtowed wealth and honours, deſpiſe the men who are placed in an humble and inferior ſtation; but rather, with their utmoſt power, by their countenance, by their protection, by juſt payment for their honeſt labour, encourage their daily endeavours for the virtuous ſupport of themſelves and their families. On the other hand, let the poor labour to provide things honeſt in the ſight of all men; and ſo, with diligence in their ſeveral employments, live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly in this preſent world, that they may obtain that glorious glorious reward promiſed in the goſpel to the poor, I mean the kingdom of heaven.

Now to God the Father, &c.

OF THE

Wretched Condition of Ireland.

PSALM CXLIV. Part of the 13th and 14th Ver.

That there be no complaining in our Streets. Happy is the People that is in ſuch a caſe.

IT is a very melancholy reflection, that ſuch a country as ours, which is capable of producing all things neceſſary, and moſt things convenient for life, ſufficient for the ſupport of four times the number of its inhabitants, ſhould yet lie under the heavieſt load of miſery and want, our ſtreets crowded with beggars, ſo many of our lower ſort of tradeſmen, labourers, labourers, and artificers, not able to find cloaths and food for their families.

I think it may therefore be of ſome uſe to lay before you the chief cauſes of this wretched condition we are in, and then it will be eaſier to aſſign what remedies are in our power towards removing, at leaſt, ſome part of theſe evils.

For it is ever to be lamented, that we lie under many diſadvantages, not by our own faults, which are peculiar to ourſelves, and which no other nation under heaven hath any reaſon to complain of.

I ſhall, therefore, firſt mention ſome cauſes of our miſeries, which I doubt are not to be remedied, until God ſhall put it in the hearts of thoſe who are ſtronger to allow us the common rights and privileges of brethren, fellow-ſubjects, and even of mankind.

The firſt cauſe of our miſery is the intolerable hardſhips we lie under in every branch of our trade, by which we are become as hewers of wood, and drawers of water, to our rigorous neighbours.

The ſecond cauſe of our miſerable ſtate is the folly, the vanity, and ingratitude

tude of thoſe vaſt numbers, who think themſelves too good to live in the country which gave them birth, and ſtill gives them bread; and rather chooſe to paſs their days, and conſume their wealth, and draw out the very vitals of their mother kingdom, among thoſe who heartily deſpiſe them.

Theſe I have but lightly touched on, becauſe I fear they are not to be redreſſed, and, beſides, I am very ſenſible how ready ſome people are to take offence at the honeſt truth; and, for that reaſon, I ſhall omit ſeveral other grievances, under which we are long likely to groan.

I ſhall therefore go on to relate ſome other cauſes of this nation's poverty, by which, if they continue much longer, it muſt infallibly ſink to utter ruin.

The firſt is, that monſtrous pride and vanity in both ſexes, eſpecially the weaker ſex, who, in the midſt of poverty, are ſuffered to run into all kind of expence and extravagance in dreſs, and particularly priding themſelves to wear nothing but what cometh from abroad, diſdaining the growth or manufacture of their own country, country, in thoſe articles where they can be better ſerved at home with half the expence; and this is grown to ſuch a height, that they will carry the whole yearly rent of a good eſtate at once on their body. And, as there is in that ſex a ſpirit of envy, by which they cannot endure to ſee others in a better habit than themſelves, ſo thoſe, whoſe fortunes can hardly ſupport their families in the neceſſaries of life, will needs vye with the richeſt and greateſt among us, to the ruin of themſelves and their poſterity.

Neither are the men leſs guilty of this pernicious folly, who, in imitation of a gaudineſs and foppery of dreſs, introduced of late years into our neighbouring kingdom, (as fools are apt to imitate only the defects of their betters) cannot find materials in their own country worthy to adorn their bodies of clay, while their minds are naked of every valuable quality.

Thus our tradeſmen and ſhopkeepers, who deal in home-goods, are left in a ſtarving condition, and only thoſe encouraged couraged who ruin the kingdom by importing among us foreign vanities.

Another cauſe of our low condition is our great luxury, the chief ſupport of which is the materials of it brought to the nation in exchange for the few valuable things left us, whereby ſo many thouſand families want the very neceſſaries of life.

Thirdly, in moſt parts of this kingdom the natives are from their infancy ſo given up to idleneſs and ſloth, that they often chuſe to beg or ſteal, rather than ſupport themſelves with their own labour; they marry without the leaſt view or thought of being able to make any proviſion for their families; and whereas, in all induſtrious nations, children are looked on as a help to their parents, with us, for want of being early trained to work, they are an intolerable burthen at home, and a grievous charge upon the publick, as appeareth from the vaſt number of ragged and naked children in town and country, led about by ſtroling women, trained up in ignorance and all manner of vice.

Laſtly,

Laſtly, A great cauſe of this nation's miſery, is that Ægyptian bondage of cruel, oppreſſing, covetous landlords, expecting that all who live under them ſhould make bricks without ſtraw, who grieve and envy when they ſee a tenant of their own in a whole coat, or able to afford one comfortable meal in a month, by which the ſpirits of the people are broken, and made for ſlavery; the farmers and cottagers, almoſt through the whole kingdom, being to all intents and purpoſes as real beggars as any of thoſe to whom we give our charity in the ſtreets. And theſe cruel landlords are every day unpeopling their kingdom, by forbidding their miſerable tenants to till the earth, againſt common reaſon and juſtice, and contrary to the practice and prudence of all other nations, by which numberleſs families have been forced either to leave the kingdom, or ſtrole about, and increaſe the number of our thieves and beggars.

Such, and much worſe, is our condition at preſent, if I had leiſure or liberty to lay it before you; and, therefore, the next thing which might be conſidered is, whether whether there may be any probable reme-dy found, at the leaſt againſt ſome part of theſe evils; for moſt of them are wholly deſperate.

But this being too large a ſubject to be now handled, and the intent of my diſ-courſe confined me to give ſome directions concerning the poor of this city, I ſhall keep myſelf within thoſe limits. It is indeed in the power of the law-givers to found a ſchool in every pariſh of the kingdom, for teaching the meaner and poorer ſort of children to ſpeak and to read the Engliſh tongue, and to provide a reaſonable maintenance for the teachers. This would, in time, aboliſh that part of barbarity and ignorance, for which our natives are ſo deſpiſed by all foreigners; this would bring them to think and act according to the rules of reaſon, by which a ſpirit of induſtry, and thrift, and honeſty would be introduced among them. And, indeed, conſidering how ſmall a tax would ſuffice for ſuch a work, it is a publick ſcandal that ſuch a thing ſhould never have been endeavoured, or, perhaps, ſo much as thought on.

To

To ſupply the want of ſuch a law, ſeveral pious perſons, in many parts of this kingdom, have been prevailed on, by the great endeavours and good example ſet them by the clergy, to erect charity ſchools in ſeveral pariſhes, to which very often the richeſt pariſhioners contribute the leaſt. In theſe ſchools, children are, or ought to be, trained up to read and write, and caſt accompts; and theſe children ſhould, if poſſible, be of honeſt parents, gone to decay through age, ſickneſs, or other unavoidable calamity, by the hand of God; not the brood of wicked ſtrollers; for it is by no means reaſonable, that the charity of well-inclined people ſhould be applied to encourage the lewdneſs of thoſe profligate, abandoned women, who crowd our ſtreets with their borrowed or ſpurious iſſue.

In thoſe hoſpitals which have good foundations and rents to ſupport them, whereof, to the ſcandal of chriſtianity, there are very few in this kingdom; I ſay, in ſuch hoſpitals, the children maintained ought to be only of decayed citizens, and freemen, and be bred up to good good trades. But in theſe ſmall pariſh charity ſchools which have no ſupport, but the caſual good will of charitable people, I do altogether diſapprove the cuſtom of putting the children 'prentice, except to the very meaneſt trades; otherwiſe the poor honeſt citizen, who is juſt able to bring up his child, and pay a ſmall ſum of money with him to a good maſter, is wholly defeated, and the baſtard iſſue, perhaps, of ſome beggar preferred before him. And hence we come to be ſo overſtocked with 'prentices and journeymen, more than our diſcouraged country can employ; and, I fear, the greateſt part of our thieves, pickpockets, and other vagabonds are of this number.

Therefore, in order to make theſe pariſh charity ſchools of great and univerſal uſe, I agree with the opinion of many wiſe perſons, that a new turn ſhould be given to this whole matter.

I think there is no complaint more juſt than what we find in almoſt every family, of the folly and ignorance, the fraud and knavery, the idleneſs and viciouſneſs, the waſtful ſquandering temper of ſervants, vants, who are, indeed, become one of the many public grievances of the kingdom; whereof, I believe, there are few maſters that now hear me who are not convinced by their own experience. And I am very confident, that more families, of all degrees, have been ruined by the corruptions of ſervants, than by all other cauſes put together. Neither is this to be wondered at, when we conſider from what nurſeries ſo many of them are received into our houſes. The firſt is the tribe of wicked boys, wherewith moſt corners of this town are peſtered, who haunt public doors. Theſe, having been born of beggars, and bred to pilfer as ſoon as they can go or ſpeak, as years come on, are employed in the loweſt offices to get themſelves bread, are practiſed in all manner of villainy, and when they are grown up, if they are not entertained in a gang of thieves, are forced to ſeek for a ſervice. The other nurſery is the barbarous and deſart part of the country, from whence ſuch lads come up hither to ſeek their fortunes, who are bred up from the dunghill in idleneſs, ignorance, lying, and thieving. From theſe two nurſeries, I ſay, a great number of our ſervants come to us, ſufficient to corrupt all the reſt. Thus, the whole race of ſervants in this kingdom have gotten ſo ill a reputation, that ſome perſons from England, come over hither into great ſtations, are ſaid to have abſolutely refuſed admitting any ſervant born among us into their families. Neither can they be juſtly blamed; for although it is not impoſſible to find an honeſt native fit for a good ſervice, yet the enquiry is too troubleſome, and the hazard too great for a ſtranger to attempt.

If we conſider the many misfortunes that befal private families, it will be found that ſervants are the cauſes and inſtruments of them all: Are our goods embezzled, waſted and deſtroyed? Is our houſe burnt down to the ground? it is by the ſloth, the drunkenneſs or the villainy of ſervants. Are we robbed and murdered in our beds? it is by confederacy with our ſervants. Are we engaged in quarrels and miſunderſtandings with our neighbours? theſe were all begun and inflamed inflamed by the falſe, malicious tongues of our ſervants. Are the ſecrets of our family betrayed, and evil repute ſpread of us? our ſervants were the authors. Do falſe accuſers riſe up againſt us (an evil too frequent in this country)? they have been tampering with our ſervants. Do our children diſcover folly, malice, pride, cruelty, revenge, undutifulneſs in their words and actions? are they ſeduced to lewdneſs or ſcandalous marriages? it is all by our ſervants. Nay, the very miſtakes, follies, blunders, and abſurdities of thoſe in our ſervice, are able to ruffle and diſcompoſe the mildeſt nature, and are often of ſuch conſequence, as to put whole families into confuſion.

Since therefore not only our domeſtic peace and quiet, and the welfare of our children, but even the very ſafety of our lives, reputations, and fortunes have ſo great a dependence upon the choice of our ſervants, I think it would well become the wiſdom of the nation to make ſome proviſion in ſo important an affair. But in the mean time, and, perhaps, to better purpoſe, it were to be wiſhed, that the children of both ſexes, entertained in the pariſh charity-ſchools, were bred up in ſuch a manner as would give them a teachable diſpoſition, and qualify them to learn whatever is required in any ſort of ſervice. For inſtance, they ſhould be taught to read and write, to know ſomewhat in caſting accounts, to underſtand the principles of religion, to practiſe cleanlineſs, to get a ſpirit of honeſty, induſtry, and thrift, and be ſeverely puniſhed for every neglect in any of theſe particulars. For, it is the misfortune of mankind, that if they are not uſed to be taught in their early childhood, whereby to acquire what I call a teachable diſpoſition, they cannot, without great difficulty, learn the eaſieſt thing in the couſe of their lives, but are always aukward and unhandy; their minds, as well as bodies, for want of early practice, growing ſtiff and unmanageable, as we obſerve in the ſort of gentlemen, who, kept from ſchool by the indulgence of their parents but a few years, are never able to recover the time they have loſt, and grow up in ignorance and all manner of vice, whereof we have too many examples all over the nation. But to return to what I was ſaying: If theſe charity-children were trained up in the manner I mentioned, and then bound apprentices in the families of gentlemen and citizens, (for which a late law giveth great encouragement) being accuſtomed from their firſt entrance to be always learning ſome uſeful thing, they would learn, in a month, more than another, without thoſe advantages, can do in a year; and, in the mean time, be very uſeful in a family, as far as their age and ſtrength would allow. And when ſuch children come to years of diſcretion, they will probably be a uſeful example to their fellow-ſervants, at leaſt they will prove a ſtrong check upon the reſt; for, I ſuppoſe, every body will allow, that one good, honeſt, diligent ſervant in a houſe may prevent abundance of miſchief in the family.

Theſe are the reaſons for which I urge this matter ſo ſtrongly, and I hope thoſe who liſten to me will conſider them.

I ſhall now ſay ſomething about that great number of poor, who, under the name of common beggars, infeſt our ſtreets, and fill our ears with their continual cries, and craving importunity. This I ſhall venture to call an unneceſſary evil, brought upon us for the groſs neglect, and want of proper management, in thoſe whoſe duty it is to prevent it. But before I proceed farther, let me humbly preſume to vindicate the juſtice and mercy of God and his dealings with mankind. Upon this particular he hath not dealt ſo hardly with his creatures as ſome would imagine, when they ſee ſo many miſerable objects ready to periſh for want: For it would infallibly be found, upon ſtrict enquiry, that there is hardly one in twenty of thoſe miſerable objects who do not owe their preſent poverty to their own faults, to their preſent ſloth and negligence, to their indiſcreet marriage without the leaſt proſpect of ſupporting a family, to their fooliſh expenſiveneſs, to their drunkenneſs, and other vices, by which they have ſquandered their gettings, and contracted diſeaſes in their old age. And, to ſpeak freely, is it any way reaſonable or juſt, that thoſe who have denied themſelves many many lawful ſatisfactions and conveniences of life, from a principle of conſcience, as well as prudence, that they might not be a burthen to the public, ſhould be charged with ſupporting others, who have brought themſelves to leſs than a morſel of bread by their idleneſs, extravagance, and vice? Yet ſuch, and no other, are for the greateſt number not only in thoſe who beg in our ſtreets, but even of what we call poor decayed houſekeepers, whom we are apt to pity as real objects of charity, and diſtinguiſh them from common beggars, although, in truth, they both owe their undoing to the ſame cauſes; only the former is either too nicely bred to endure walking half naked in the ſtreets, or too proud to own their wants. For the artificer or other tradeſman, who pleadeth he is grown too old to work or look after buſineſs, and therefore expecteth aſſiſtance as a decayed houſekeeper; may we not aſk him, why he did not take care, in his youth and ſtrength of days, to make ſome proviſion againſt old age, when he ſaw ſo many examples before him of people undone by their idleneſs and vicious extravagance? and to go a little highe whence cometh it that ſo many citize and ſhopkeepers, of the moſt credital trade, who once made a good figure, to decay by their expenſive pride a vanity, affecting to educate and dreſs th children above their abilities, or the ſt of life they ought to expect?

However, ſince the beſt of us have t
many infirmities to anſwer for, we oug not to be ſevere upon thoſe of othe and therefore if our brother, throu grief, or ſickneſs, or other incapacity, not in a condition to preſerve his beir
we ought to ſupport him to the beſt of c power, without reflecting over-ſeriou on the cauſes that brought him to miſery. But in order to this, and to tu our charity into its proper channel, ought to conſider who and where th objects are, whom it is chiefly incumb upon us to ſupport.

By the ancient law of this realm, ſtill force, every pariſh is obliged to maint it's own poor, which although ſome m think to be not very equal, becauſe ma pariſhes are very rich, and have few pc

among them, and others the contrary; yet, I think, may be juſtly defended: For as to remote country pariſhes in the deſart part of the kingdom, the neceſſaries of life are there ſo cheap, that the infirm poor may be provided for with little burden to the inhabitants. But in what I am going to ſay, I ſhall confine myſelf only to this city, where we are over-run not only with our own poor, but with a far greater number from every part of the nation. Now, I ſay, this evil of being encumbered with ſo many foreign beggars, who have not the leaſt title to our charity, and whom it is impoſſible for us to ſupport, may be eaſily remedied, if the government of this city, in conjunction with the clergy and pariſh officers, would think it worth their care; and I am ſure few things deſerve it better. For, if every pariſh would take a liſt of thoſe begging poor which properly belong to it, and compel each of them to wear a badge, marked and numbered, ſo as to be ſeen and known by all they meet, and confine them to beg within the limits of their own pariſh, ſeverely puniſhing them when

when they offend, and driving out all interlopers from other pariſhes, we could then make a computation of their numbers; and the ſtrolers from the country being driven away, the remainder would not be too many for the charity of thoſe who paſs by to maintain; neither would any beggar, although confined to his own pariſh, be hindered from receiving the charity of the whole town; becauſe, in this caſe, thoſe well-diſpoſed perſons who walk the ſtreets will give their charity to ſuch whom they think proper objects, where-ever they meet them, provided they are found in their own pariſhes, and wearing their badges of diſtinction. And, as to thoſe pariſhes which bordered upon the ſkirts and ſuburbs of the town, where country ſtrolers are uſed to harbour themſelves, they muſt be forced to go back to their homes, when they find no body to relieve them, becauſe they want that mark which only gives them licence to beg. Upon this point, it were to be wiſhed, that inferior pariſh-officers had better encouragement given them to perform their duty in driving away all beggars gars who do not belong to the pariſh, inſtead of conniving at them, as it is ſaid they do for ſome ſmall contribution; for the whole city would ſave much more by ridding themſelves of many hundred beggars, than they would loſe by giving pariſh-officers a reaſonable ſupport.

It ſhould ſeem a ſtrange, unaccountable thing, that thoſe who have probably been reduced to want by riot, lewdneſs, and idleneſs, although they have aſſurance enough to beg alms publicly from all they meet, ſhould yet be too proud to wear the pariſh badge, which would turn ſo much to their own advantage, by ridding them of ſuch great numbers, who now intercept the greateſt part of what belongeth to them: Yet it is certain, that there are very many who publicly declare they will never wear thoſe badges, and many others who either hide or throw them away: But the remedy for this is very ſhort, eaſy, and juſt, by trying them like vagabonds and ſturdy beggars, and forcibly driving them out of the town.

Therefore, as ſoon as this expedient of wearing badges ſhall be put in practice, I do do earneſtly exhort all thoſe who hear me, never to give their alms to any public beggar who doth not fully comply with this order, by which our number of poor will be ſo reduced, that it will be much eaſier to provide for the reſt. Our ſhop-doors will be no longer crouded with ſo many thieves and pick-pockets, in beggars habits, nor our ſtreets ſo dangerous to thoſe who are forced to walk in the night.

Thus I have, with great freedom, delivered my thoughts upon this ſubject, which ſo nearly concerneth us. It is certainly a bad ſcheme, to any chriſtian country, which God hath bleſſed with fruitfulneſs, and where the people enjoy the juſt rights and privileges of mankind, that there ſhould be any beggars at all. But, alas! among us, where the whole nation itſelf is almoſt reduced to beggary by the diſadvantages we lie under, and the hardſhips we are forced to bear; the lazineſs, ignorance, thoughtleſſneſs, ſquandering temper, ſlaviſh nature, and uncleanly manner of living in the poor popiſh natives, together with the cruel oppreſſions oppreſſions of their lordlords, who delight to ſee their vaſſals in the duſt; I ſay, that in ſuch a nation, how can we otherwiſe expect than to be over-run with objects of miſery and want? Therefore, there can be no method to free this city from ſo intolerable a grievance, than by endeavouring, as far as in us lies, that the burden may be more equally divided, by contributing to maintain our own poor, and forcing the ſtrolers and vagabonds to return to their ſeveral homes in the country, there to ſmite the conſcience of thoſe oppreſſors, who firſt ſtripped them of all their ſubſtance.

I might here, if the time would permit, offer many arguments to perſuade to works of charity; but you hear them ſo often from the pulpit, that I am willing to hope you may not now want them. Beſides, my preſent deſign was only to ſhew where your alms would be beſt beſtowed, to the honour of God, your own eaſe and advantage, the ſervice of your country, and the benefit of the poor. I deſire you will all weigh and conſider what I have ſpoken, and, according to your your ſeveral ſtations and abilities, endeavour to put it in practice; and God give you good ſucceſs. To whom with the Son and Holy Ghoſt, be all honour, &c.

The Grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, &c.

ACTS, Chap. xx. Ver. 9.

And there ſat in the window a certain young man named Eutychus, being fallen into a deep ſleep; and while Paul was long preaching, he ſunk down with ſleep, and fell down from the third loft, and was taken up dead.

I HAVE choſen theſe words with deſign, if poſſible, to diſturb ſome part in this audience of half an hour's ſleep, for the convenience and exerciſe whereof this place, at this ſeaſon of the day, is very much celebrated.

There is indeed one mortal diſadvantage to which all preaching is ſubject; that thoſe who, by the wickedneſs of their lives, ſtand in greateſt need, have uſually the

the ſmalleſt ſhare; for either they are abſent upon the account of idleneſs, or ſpleen, or hatred to religion, or in order to doze away the intemperance of the week; or, if they do come, they are ſure to employ their minds rather any other way, than regarding or attending to the buſineſs of the place.

The accident which happened to this young man in the text, hath not been ſufficient to diſcourage his ſucceſſors: But, becauſe the preachers now in the world, however they may exceed St. Paul in the art of ſetting men to ſleep, do extremely fall ſhort of him in the working of miracles; therefore men are become ſo cautious as to chuſe more ſafe and convenient ſtations and poſtures for taking their repoſe, without hazard of their perſons; and, upon the whole matter, chuſe rather to truſt their deſtruction to a miracle, than their ſafety. However, this being not the only way by which the lukewarm chriſtians and ſcorners of the age diſcover their neglect and contempt of preaching, I ſhall enter expreſsly into conſider-conſideration of this matter, and order my diſcourſe in the following method:

Firſt, I ſhall produce ſeveral inſtances to ſhew the great neglect of preaching now amongſt us.

Secondly, I ſhall reckon up ſome of the uſual quarrels men have againſt preaching.

Thirdly, I ſhall ſet forth the great evil of this neglect and contempt of preaching, and diſcover the real cauſes from whence in proceedeth.

Laſtly, I ſhall offer ſome remedies againſt this great and ſpreading evil.

Firſt, I ſhall produce certain inſtances to ſhew the great neglect of preaching now among us.

Theſe may be reduced under two heads. Firſt, men's abſence from the ſervice of the church; and ſecondly, their miſbehaviour when they are here.

The firſt inſtance of men's neglect, is in their frequent abſence from the church.

There is no excuſe ſo trivial, that will not paſs upon ſome men's conſciences to excuſe their attendance at the public worſhip of God. Some are ſo unfortunate as to be always indiſpoſed on the Lord's day, and think nothing ſo unwholeſome as the air of a church. Others have their affairs ſo odly contrived, as to be always unluckily prevented by buſineſs. With ſome it is a great mark of wit, and deep underſtanding, to ſtay at home on Sundays. Others again diſcover ſtrange fits of lazineſs, that ſeize them, particularly on that day, and confine them to their beds. Others are abſent out of mere contempt of religion. And, laſtly, there are not a few who look upon it as a day of reſt, and therefore claim the privilege of their caſtle, to keep the ſabbath by eating, drinking, and ſleeping, after the toil and labour of the week. Now in all this the worſt circumſtance is, that theſe perſons are ſuch whoſe companies are moſt required, and who ſtand moſt in need of a phyſician.

Secondly, Men's great neglect and contempt of preaching, appear by their miſbehaviour when at church.

If the audience were to be ranked under ſeveral heads, according to their behaviour, haviour, when the word of God is delivered, how ſmall a number would appear of thoſe who receive it as they ought? How much of the ſeed then ſown would be found to fall by the way ſide, upon ſtony ground or among thorns? and how little good ground would there be to take it? A preacher cannot look round from the pulpit, without obſerving, that ſome are in a perpetual whiſper, and, by their air and geſture, give occaſion to ſuſpect, that they are in thoſe very minutes defaming their neighbour. Others have their eyes and imagination conſtantly engaged in ſuch a circle of objects, perhaps to gratify the moſt unwarrantable deſires, that they never once attend to the buſineſs of the place; the ſound of the preacher's words doth not ſo much as once interrupt them. Some have their minds wandering among idle, worldly, or vicious thoughts. Some lie at catch to ridicule whatever they hear, and with much wit and humour provide a ſtock of laughter, by furniſhing themſelves from the pulpit. But, of all miſbehaviour, none is comparable to that of thoſe who come here to ſleep; opium is not ſo ſtupifying to many perſons as an afternoon ſermon. Perpetual cuſtom hath ſo brought it about, that the words, of whatever preacher, become only a ſort of uniform ſound at a diſtance, than which nothing is more effectual to lull the ſenſes. For, that it is the very ſound of the ſermon which bindeth up their faculties, is manifeſt from hence, becauſe they all awake ſo very regularly as ſoon as it ceaſeth, and with much devotion receive the bleſſing, dozed and beſotted with indecencies I am aſhamed to repeat.

I proceed, Secondly, to reckon up ſome of the uſual quarrels men have againſt preaching, and to ſhew the unreaſonableneſs of them.

Such unwarrantable demeanor as I have deſcribed, among chriſtians, in the houſe of God, in a ſolemn aſſembly, while their faith and duty are explained and delivered, have put thoſe who are guilty upon inventing ſome excuſes to extenuate their fault: This they do by turning the blame either upon the particular preacher, or upon preaching in general. Firſt, they object object againſt the particular preacher; his manner, his delivery, his voice are diſagreeable, his ſtyle and expreſſion are flat and low; ſometimes improper and abſurd; the matter is heavy, trivial and inſipid; ſometimes deſpicable, and perfectly ridiculous; or elſe, on the other ſide, he runs up into unintelligible ſpeculation, empty notions, and abſtracted flights, all clad in words above uſual underſtandings.

Secondly, They object againſt preaching in general; it is a perfect road of talk; they know already whatever can be ſaid; they have heard the ſame an hundred times over. They quarrel that preachers do not relieve an old beaten ſubject with wit and invention; and that now the art is loſt of moving men's paſſions, ſo common among the ancient orators of Greece and Rome. Theſe, and the like objections, are frequently in the mouths of men who deſpiſe the fooliſhneſs of preaching. But let us examine the reaſonableneſs of them.

The doctrine delivered by all preachers is the ſame: So we preach, and ſo ye believe: But the manner of delivering is ſuited to the ſkill and abilities of each, which differ in preachers juſt as in the reſt of mankind. However, in perſonal diſlikes of a particular preacher, are theſe men ſure they are always in the right? Do they conſider how mixed a thing is every audience, whoſe taſte and judgment differ, perhaps, every day, not only from each other, but themſelves? And how to calculate a diſcourſe, that ſhall exactly ſuit them all, is beyond the force and reach of human reaſon, knowledge, or invention. Wit and eloquence are ſhining qualities, that God hath imparted, in great degrees, to very few, nor any more to be expected, in the generality of any rank among men, than riches and honour. But further: If preaching in general be all old and beaten, and that they are already ſo well acquainted with it, more ſhame and guilt to them who ſo little edify by it. But, theſe men, whoſe ears are ſo delicate as not to endure a plain diſcourſe of religion, who expect a conſtant ſupply of wit and eloquence on a ſubject handled ſo many thouſand times; what will they ſay when we turn the objection upon themſelves, who with all the lewd and prophane liberty of diſcourſe they take, upon ſo many thouſand ſubjects, are ſo dull as to furniſh nothing but tedious repetitions, and little paultry, nauſeous common-places, ſo vulgar, ſo worn, or ſo obvious, as, upon any other occaſion, but that of advancing vice, would be hooted off the ſtage? nor, laſtly, are preachers juſtly blamed for neglecting human oratory to move the paſſions, which is not the buſineſs of a chriſtian orator, whoſe office it is only to work upon faith and reaſon. All other eloquence hath been a perfect cheat, to ſtir up men's paſſions againſt truth and juſtice, for the ſervice of a faction, to put falſe colours upon things, and by an amuſement of agreeable words, make the worſe reaſon appear to be the better. This is certainly not to be allowed in chriſtian eloquence, and, therefore, St. Paul took quite the other courſe; he came not with excellency of words, or enticing ſpeech of men's wiſdom, but in plain evidence of the ſpirit and power. And perhaps it was for that reaſon the young man Eutychus, uſed to the Grecian eloquence, grew tired and fell ſo faſt aſleep.

I go on, Thirdly, to ſet forth the great evil of this neglect and ſcorn of preaching, and to diſcover the real cauſes from whence it proceedeth.

I think it is obvious to believe, that this neglect of preaching hath very much occaſioned the great decay of religion among us. To this may be imputed no ſmall part of that contempt ſome men beſtow on the clergy; for, whoever talketh without being regarded, is ſure to be deſpiſed. To this we owe, in a great meaſure, the ſpreading of atheiſm and infidelity among us; for, religion, like all other things, is ſooneſt put out of countenance by being ridiculed. The ſcorn of preaching might perhaps have been at firſt introduced by men of nice ears and refined taſte; but, it is now become a ſpreading evil, through all degrees, and both ſexes; for, ſince ſleeping, talking, and laughing are qualities ſufficient to furniſh out a critic, the meaneſt and moſt ignorant have ſet up a title, and ſucceeded in it as well as their betters.

betters. Thus are the laſt efforts of reforming mankind rendered wholely uſeleſs: How ſhall they hear, ſaith the apoſtle, without a preacher? But, if they have a preacher, and make it a point of wit or breeding not to hear him, what remedy is left? To this neglect of preaching, we may alſo entirely impute that groſs ignorance among us in the very principles of religion, which it is amazing to find in perſons who very much value their own knowledge and underſtanding in other things; yet, it is a viſible, inexcuſable ignorance, even in the meaneſt among us, conſidering the many advantages they have of learning their duty. And it hath been the great encouragement to all manner of vice: For, in vain we preach down ſin to a people, whoſe hearts are waxed groſs, whoſe ears are dull of hearing, and whoſe eyes are cloſed. Therefore Chriſt himſelf, in his diſcourſes, frequently rouſeth up the attention of the multitude, and of his diſciples themſelves, with his expreſſion, He that hath ears to hear, let him hear. But, among all neglects of preaching, none is ſo fatal as that of ſleeping in the the houſe of God; a ſcorner may liſten to truth and reaſon, and in time grow ſerious; an unbeliever may feel the pangs of a guilty conſcience; one whoſe thoughts or eyes wander among other objects, may, by a lucky word, be called back to attention: But the ſleeper ſhuts up all avenues to his ſoul: He is like the deaf adder, that hearkeneth not to the voice of the charmer, charm he never ſo wiſely. And, we may preach with as good ſucceſs to the grave that is under his feet.

But the great evil of this neglect will further yet appear, from conſidering the real cauſes whence it proceedeth; whereof the firſt, I take to be, an evil conſcience. Many men come to church to ſave or gain a reputation; or becauſe they will not be ſingular, but comply with an eſtabliſhed cuſtom; yet, all the while, they are loaded with the guilt of old rooted ſins. Theſe men can expect to hear of nothing but terrors and threatenings, their ſins laid open in true colours, and eternal miſery the reward of them; therefore, no wonder they ſtop their ears, and divert their thoughts,

Another cauſe of this neglect is, a heart ſet upon worldly things. Men whoſe minds are much enſlaved to earthly affairs all the week, cannot diſengage or break the chain of their thoughts ſo ſuddenly, as to apply to a diſcourſe that is wholely foreign to what they have moſt at heart. Tell a uſurer of charity, and mercy, and reſtitution, you talk to the deaf; his heart and ſoul, with all his ſenſes, are got among his bags, or he is gravely aſleep, and dreaming of a mortgage. Tell a man of buſineſs, that the cares of the world choak the good ſeed; that we muſt not encumber ourſelves with much ſerving; that the ſalvation of his ſoul is the one thing neceſſary: You ſee, indeed, the ſhape of a man before you, but his faculties are all gone off among clients and papers, thinking how to defend a bad cauſe, or find flaws in a good one; or, he weareth out the time in drouſy nods.

A third cauſe of the great neglect and ſcorn of preaching, ariſeth from the practice of men who ſet up to decry and diſparage diſparage religion; theſe, being zealous to promote infidelity and vice, learn a rote of buffoonry that ſerveth all occaſions, and refutes the ſtrongeſt arguments for piety and good manners. Theſe have a ſet of ridicule calculated for all ſermons, and all preachers, and can be extremely witty as often as they pleaſe upon the ſame fund.

Let me now, in the laſt place, offer ſome remedies againſt this great evil.

It will be one remedy againſt the contempt of preaching, rightly to conſider the end for which it was deſigned. There are many who place abundance of merit in going to church, although it be with no other proſpect but that of being well entertained, wherein if they happen to fail, they return wholely diſappointed. Hence it is become an impertinent vein among people of all ſorts to hunt after what they call a good ſermon, as if it were a matter of paſtime and diverſion. Our buſineſs, alas! is quite another thing, either to learn, or, at leaſt, be reminded of our duty, to apply the doctrines delivered, compare the rules we hear with our lives lives and actions, and find wherein we have tranſgreſſed. Theſe are the diſpoſitions men ſhould bring into the houſe of God, and then they will be little concerned about the preacher's wit or eloquence, nor be curious to enquire out his faults or infirmities, but conſider how to correct their own.

Another remedy againſt the contempt of preaching, is, that men would conſider, whether it be not reaſonable to give more allowance for the different abilities of preachers than they uſually do; refinements of ſtile, and flights of wit, as they are not properly the buſineſs of any preacher, ſo they cannot poſſibly be the talents of all. In moſt other diſcourſes, men are ſatisfied with ſober ſenſe and plain reaſon; and, as underſtandings uſually go, even that is not over frequent. Then why they ſhould be ſo over nice in expectation of eloquence, where it is neither neceſſary nor convenient, is hard to imagine.

Laſtly, The ſcorners of preaching would do well to conſider, that this talent of ridicule, ridiclue, they value ſo much, is a perfection very eaſily acquired, and applied to all things whatſoever; neither is any thing at all the worſe, becauſe it is capable of being perverted to burleſque: Perhaps it may be the more perfect upon that ſcore; ſince we know, the moſt celebrated pieces have been thus treated with greateſt ſucceſs. It is in any man's power to ſuppoſe a fool's cap on the wiſeſt head, and then laugh at his own ſuppoſition. I think there are not many things cheaper than ſuppoſing and laughing; and if the uniting theſe two talents can bring a thing into contempt, it is hard to know where it may end.

To conclude. Theſe conſiderations may, perhaps, have ſome effect while men are awake; but what arguments ſhall we uſe to the ſleeper? What methods ſhall we take to hold open his eyes? Will he be moved by conſiderations of common civility? We know it is reckoned a point of very bad manners to ſleep in private company, when, perhaps, the tedious impertinence of many talkers would render it at leaſt as excuſable as at the dulleſt ſermon. Do they think it a ſmall thing to watch four hours at a play, where all virtue and religion are openly reviled; and can they not watch one half hour to hear them defended? Is this to deal like a judge, (I mean like a good judge) to liſten on one ſide of the cauſe, and ſleep on the other? I ſhall add but one word more: That this indecent ſloth is very much owing to that luxury and exceſs men uſually practice upon this day, by which half the ſervice thereof is turned to ſin; men dividing the time between God and their bellies, when, after a gluttonous meal, their ſenſes dozed and ſtupified, they retire to God's houſe to ſleep out the afternoon. Surely, brethren, theſe things ought not ſo to be.

He that hath ears to hear, let him hear. And God give us all grace to hear and receive his holy word to the ſalvation of our own ſouls.

REMARKS

INTITULED,

The Rights of the Chriſtian Church, &c.

Written in the Year 1708, but left unfiniſhed.

BEFORE I enter upon a particular examination of this treatiſe, it will be convenient to do two things:

Firſt, To give ſome account of the author, together with the motives, that might probably engage him in ſuch a work. And,

Secondly, To diſcover the nature and tendency in general, of the work itſelf.

The firſt of theſe, although it hath been objected againſt, ſeems highly reaſonable, eſpecially in books that inſtil pernicious principles. For, although a book is not intrinſically much better or worſe, according to the ſtature or complexion of the author, yet when it happens to make a noiſe, we are apt, and curious, as in other noiſes, to look about from whence it cometh. But however, there is ſomething more in the matter.

If a theological ſubject be well handled by the layman, it is better received than if it came from a divine; and that for reaſons obvious enough, which, although of little weight in themſelves, will ever have a great deal with mankind.

But, when books are written with ill intentions, to advance dangerous opinions, or deſtroy foundations; it may be then of real uſe to know from what quarter they come, and go a good way towards their confutation. For inſtance, if any man ſhould write a book againſt the lawfulneſs of puniſhing felony with death; and, upon enquiry, the author ſhould be found in Newgate under condemnation for robbing a houſe; his arguments would not very unjuſtly loſe much of their force, from the circumſtances he lay under. So, when Milton writ his book of divorces, it was preſently rejected as an occaſional treatiſe; becauſe every body knew, he had a ſhrew for his wife. Neither can there be any reaſon imagined, why he might not, after he was blind, have writ another upon the danger and inconvenience of eyes. But, it is a piece of logic which will hardly paſs on the world; that becauſe one man hath a ſore noſe, therefore all the town ſhould put plaiſters upon theirs. So, if this treatiſe about the rights of the church ſhould prove to be the work of a man ſteady in his principles, of exact morals, and profound learning, a true lover of his country, and a hater of chriſtianity, as what he really believes to be a cheat upon mankind, whom he would undeceive purely for their good; it might be apt to check unwary men, even of good diſpoſitions towards religion. But, if it be found the production of a man ſowered with age and misfortunes, together with the conſciouſneſs of paſt miſcarriages; of one, who, in hopes of preferment, was reconciled to the Popiſh religion; of one wholely proſtitute in life and principles, and only an enemy to religion, becauſe it condemns them: In this caſe, caſe, and this laſt I find is the univerſal opinion, he is like to have few proſelytes, beſide thoſe, who, from a ſenſe of their vicious lives, require to be perpetually ſupplied by ſuch amuſements as this; which ſerve to flatter their wiſhes, and debaſe their underſtandings.

I know there are ſome who would fain have it, that this diſcourſe was written by a club of free-thinkers, among whom the ſuppoſed author only came in for a ſhare. But, ſure, we cannot judge ſo meanly of any party, without affronting the dignity of mankind. If this be ſo, and if here be the product of all their quotas and contributions, we muſt needs allow, that free-thinking is a moſt confined and limited talent. It is true indeed, the whole diſcourſe ſeemeth to be a motly, inconſiſtent compoſition, made up of various ſhreds of equal fineneſs, although of different colours. It is a bundle of incoherent maxims and aſſertions, that frequently deſtroy one another. But ſtill there is the ſame flatneſs of thought and ſtile; the ſame weak advances towards wit and raillery; the ſame petulancy and pertneſs of ſpirit; the ſame train of ſuperficial reading; the ſame thread of thread-bare quotations: the ſame affectation of forming general rules upon falſe and ſcanty premiſes. And, laſtly, the ſame rapid venom ſprinkled over the whole; which, like the dying impotent bite of a trodden benumbed ſnake, may be nauſeous and offenſive, but cannot be very dangerous.

And, indeed, I am ſo far from thinking this libel to be born of ſeveral fathers, that it hath been the wonder of ſeveral others, as well as myſelf; how it was poſſible for any man, who appeareth to have gone the common circle of academical education; who hath taken ſo univerſal a liberty, and hath ſo entirely laid aſide all regards, not only of Chriſtianity, but common truth and juſtice; one who is dead to all ſenſe of ſhame, and ſeemeth to be paſt the getting or loſing a reputation, ſhould, with ſo many advantages, and upon ſo unlimited a ſubject, come out with ſo poor, ſo jejune a production. Should we pity or be amazed at ſo perverſe a talent, which, inſtead of qualifying an author to give a new turn to old matter, matter, diſpoſeth him quite contrary to talk in an old beaten trivial manner upon topics wholely new. To make ſo many ſallies into pedantry without a call, upon a ſubject the moſt alien, and in the very moments he is declaiming againſt it, and in an age too, where it is ſo violently exploded, eſpecially among thoſe readers he propoſeth to entertain.

I know it will be ſaid, that this is only to talk in the common ſtyle of an anſwerer; but I have not ſo little policy. If there were any hope of reputation or merit from ſuch victory, I ſhould be apt like others to cry up the courage and conduct of an enemy. Whereas to detect the weakneſs, the malice, the ſophiſtry, the falſhood, the ignorance of ſuch a writer, requireth little more than to rank his perfections in ſuch an order, and place them in ſuch a light, that the commoneſt reader may form a judgment of them.

It may ſtill be a wonder how ſo heavy a book, written upon a ſubject in appearance ſo little inſtructive or diverting, ſhould ſurvive to three editions, and conſequently ſequently find a better reception than is uſual with ſuch bulky ſpiritleſs volumes; and this, in an age that pretendeth ſo ſoon to be nauſeated with what is tedious and dull. To which I can only return, that, as burning a book by the common hangman, is a known expedient to make it ſell: So, to write a book that deſerveth ſuch treatment, is another: And a third, perhaps as effectual as either, is to ply an inſipid, worthleſs tract with grave and learned anſwers, as Dr. Hicks, Dr. Potter, and Mr. Wotton have done. Deſign and performances, however commendable, have glanced a reputation upon the piece; which oweth its life to the ſtrength of thoſe hands and weapons, that were raiſed to deſtroy it; like flinging a mountain upon a worm, which, inſtead of being bruiſed, by the advantage of its littleneſs, lodgeth under it unhurt.

But neither is this all. For the ſubject, as unpromiſing as it ſeemeth at firſt view, is no leſs than that of Lucretius, to free men's minds from the bondage of religion; and this not by little hints and by piece-meal, after the manner of thoſe little atheiſtical atheiſtical tracts that ſteal into the world, but in a thorough wholeſale manner; by making religion, church, chriſtianity, with all their concomitants, a perfect contrivance of the civil power. It is an imputation often charged on theſe ſort of men, that, by their invectives againſt religion, they can poſſibly propoſe no other end than that of fortifying themſelves and others againſt the reproaches of a vicious life; it being neceſſary for men of libertine practices to embrace libertine principles, or elſe they cannot act in conſiſtence with any reaſon, or preſerve any peace of mind. Whether ſuch authors have this deſign, (whereof I think they have never gone about to acquit themſelves) thus much is certain; that no other uſe is made of ſuch writings: Neither did I ever hear this author's book juſtified by any perſon, either Whig or Tory, except ſuch who are of that profligate character. And, I believe, whoever examineth it, will be of the ſame opinion; altho' indeed ſuch wretches are ſo numerous, that it ſeemeth rather ſurprizing, why the book hath had no more editions, than why it ſhould have ſo many.

Having thus endeavoured to ſatisfy the curious with ſome account of this author's character, let us examine what might probably be the motives to engage him in ſuch a work. I ſhall ſay nothing of the principal, which is a ſum of money; becauſe that is not a mark to diſtinguiſh him from any other trader with the preſs. I will ſay nothing of revenge and malice, from reſentment of the indignities and contempt he hath undergone for his crime of apoſtacy. To this paſſion he has thought fit to ſacrifiſe order, propriety, diſcretion, and common-ſenſe, as may be ſeen in every page of his book: But, I am deceived, if there were not a third motive as powerful as the other two; and that is, vanity. About the latter end of king James's reign he had almoſt finiſhed a learned diſcourſe in defence of the church of Rome, and to juſtify his converſion: All which, upon the revolution, was quite out of ſeaſon. Having thus proſtituted his reputation, and at once ruined his hopes, he had no courſe left, but to ſhew his his ſpite againſt religion in general; the falſe pretenſions to which, had proved ſo deſtructive to his credit and fortune: And, at the ſame time, loth to employ the ſpeculations of ſo many years to no purpoſe; by an eaſy turn, the ſame arguments he had made uſe of to advance popery, were full as properly levelled by him againſt Chriſtianity itſelf; like the image, which, while it was new and handſome, was worſhiped for a ſaint, and when it came to be old and broken, was ſtill good enough to make a tolerable devil. And, therefore every reader will obſerve, that the arguments for popery are much the ſtrongeſt of any in his Book, as I ſhall further remark when I find them in my way.

There is one circumſtance in his title-page, which I take to be not amiſs, where he calleth his book, Part the Firſt. This is a project to fright away anſwerers, and make the poor advocates for religion believe, he ſtill keepeth further vengeance in petto. It muſt be allowed, he hath not wholely loſt time, while he was of the Romiſh Communion. This very trick he

he learned from his old father, the pope; whoſe cuſtom it is to lift up his hand, and threaten to fulminate, when he never meant to ſhoot his bolts; becauſe the princes of Chriſtendom had learned the ſecret to avoid or deſpiſe them. Dr. Hicks knew this very well, and therefore, in his Anſwer to this Book of the Rights, where a ſecond Part is threatened, like a raſh perſon he deſperately crieth, Let it come. But I, who have not too much flame to provoke angry wits of his ſtandard, muſt tell the author, that the doctor plays the wag, as if he were ſure, it were all grimace. For my part, I declare, if he writeth a ſecond part, I will not write another anſwer; or, if I do, it ſhall be publiſhed, before the other part cometh out.

There may have been another motive, although it be hardly credible, both for publiſhing this work, and threatening a ſecond part: It is not ſoon conceived how far the ſenſe of a man's vanity will tranſport him. This man muſt have ſomewhere heard, that dangerous enemies have been often bribed to ſilence with money or preferment: And, therefore, to ſhew how formidable he is, he hath publiſhed his firſt eſſay; and, in hopes of hire to be quiet, hath frighted us with his deſign of another. What muſt the clergy do in theſe unhappy circumſtances? If they ſhould beſtow this man bread enough to ſtop his mouth, it will but open thoſe of a hundred more, who are every whit as well qualified to rail as he. And truly, when I compare the former enemies to Chriſtianity, ſuch as Socinus, Hobbes, and Spinoſa, with ſuch of their ſucceſſors, as Toland, Aſgil, Coward, Gildon, this author of the Rights, and ſome others; the church appeareth to me like the ſick old lion in the fable, who, after having his perſon outraged by the bull, the elephant, the horſe, and the bear, took nothing ſo much to heart, as to find himſelf at laſt inſulted by the ſpurn of an aſs.

I will now add a few words to give the reader ſome general notion of the nature and tendency of the work itſelf.

I think I may aſſert, without the leaſt partiality, that it is a treatiſe wholely devoid of wit or learning, under the moſt violent violent and weak endeavours and pretences to both. That it is repleniſhed throughout with bold, rude, improbable falſhoods, and groſs miſinterpretations; and ſupported by the moſt impudent ſophiſtry and falſe logic I have any where obſerved. To this he hath added a paultry, traditional cant of prieſt-rid and prieſt-craft, without reaſon or pretext as he applieth it. And when he raileth at thoſe doctrines in popery (which no proteſtant was ever ſuppoſed to believe) he leads the reader, however, by the hand, to make applications againſt the Engliſh clergy, and then he never faileth to triumph, as if he had made a very ſhrewd and notable ſtroke. And becauſe the court and kingdom ſeemeth diſpoſed to moderation with regard to diſſenters, more perhaps than is agreeable to the hot unreaſonable temper of ſome miſtaken men among us; therefore under the ſhelter of that popular opinion, he ridiculeth all that is ſound in religion, even Chriſtianity itſelf, under the Names of Jacobite, Tackers, High-Church, and other terms of factious jargon. All which, if it it were to be firſt raſed from his Book (as juſt ſo much of nothing to the purpoſe) how little would remain to give the trouble of an anſwer! To which let me add, that the ſpirit or genius, which animates the whole, is plainly perceived to be nothing elſe but the abortive malice of an old neglected man, who hath long lain under the extremes of obloquy, poverty and contempt; that have ſoured his temper, and made him fearleſs. But where is the merit of being bold, to a man that is ſecure of impunity to his perſon, and is paſt apprehenſion of any thing elſe. He that has neither reputation nor bread, hath very little to loſe, and has therefore as little to fear. And, as it is uſually ſaid, Whoever values not his own life, is maſter of another man's; ſo there is ſomething like it in reputation: He that is wholely loſt to all regards of truth or modeſty: may ſcatter ſo much calumny and ſcandal, that ſome part may perhaps be taken up before it fall to the ground; becauſe the ill talent of the world is ſuch, that thoſe who will be at pains enough to inform themſelves in a malicious ſtory, will take

none at all to be undeceived, nay, will be apt with ſome reluctance to admit a favourable truth.

To expoſtulate, therefore, with this author for doing miſchief to religion, is to ſtrew his bed with roſes; he will reply in triumph, that this was his deſign; and I am loth to mortify him, by aſſerting he hath done none at all. For I never yet ſaw ſo poor an atheiſtical ſcribble, which would not ſerve as a twig for ſinking libertines to catch at. It muſt be allowed in their behalf, that the faith of Chriſtians is not as a grain of muſtard-ſeed in compariſon of theirs, which can remove ſuch mountains of abſurdities, and ſubmit with ſo entire a reſignation to ſuch apoſtles. If theſe men had any ſhare of that reaſon they pretend to, they would retire into chriſtianity, meerly to give it eaſe. And therefore men can never be confirmed in ſuch doctrines, until they are confirmed in their vices; which laſt, as we have already obſerved, is the principal deſign of this and all other writers againſt revealed religion.

I am now opening the book which I propoſe to examine. An employment, as it is entirely new to me, ſo it is that to which, of all others, I have naturally the greateſt antipathy. And, indeed, who can dwell upon a tedious piece of inſipid thinking, and falſe reaſoning, ſo long as I am likely to do, without ſharing the infection?

But, before I plunge into the depths of the book itſelf, I muſt be forced to wade through the ſhallows of a long preface.

This preface, large as we ſee it, is only made up of ſuch ſupernumerary arguments againſt an independent power in the church, as he could not, without nauſeous repetition, ſcatter into the body of his book: And it is detached, like a forlorn hope, to blunt the enemy's ſword that intendeth to attack him. Now, I think, it will be eaſy to prove, that the opinion of imperium in imperio, in the ſenſe he chargeth it upon the clergy of England, is what no one divine of any reputation, and very few at all, did ever maintain; and, that their univerſal ſentiment in this matter is ſuch as few proteſtants did ever diſpute. But, if the author of the Regale, or two or three more obſcure obſcure writers, have carried any points further than ſcripture and reaſon will allow, (which is more than I know, or ſhall trouble myſelf to enquire) the clergy of England is no more anſwerable for thoſe, than the laity is for all the folly and impertinence of this treatiſe. And, therefore, that people may not be amuſed, or think this man is ſomewhat, that he hath advanced or defended any oppreſſed truths, or overthrown any growing dangerous errors, I will ſet in as clear a light as I can, what I conceive to be held by the eſtabliſhed clergy and all reaſonable proteſtants in this matter.

Every body knoweth and allows, that in all government there is an abſolute, unlimited, legiſlative power, which is originally in the body of the people, although, by cuſtom, conqueſt, uſurpation, or other accidents, ſometimes fallen into the hands of one or a few. This in England is placed in the three eſtates (otherwiſe called called the two houſes of parliament) in conjunction with the king. And whatever they pleaſe to enact or to repeal in the ſettled forms, whether it be eccleſiaſtical or civil, immediately becometh law

w or nullity. ·1 decrees may gainſt equity, truth, reaſon and religion, ut they are not againſt law; becauſe law the will of the ſupreme legiſlature, and at is, themſelves. And there is no anner of doubt, but the ſame authority, henever it pleaſeth, may aboliſh chriſti-nity, and ſet up the Jewiſh, Mahometan, r Heathen Religion. In ſhort, they may o any thing within the compaſs of huan power. And, therefore, who will iſpute that the ſame law, which deprived he church not only of lands, miſapplied
o ſuperſtitious uſes, but even the tythes nd glebes, (the ancient and neceſſary ıpport of pariſh prieſts) may take away ll the reſt, whenever the lawgivers pleaſe, nd make the prieſthood as primitive, as his writer, or others of his ſtamp, can eſire.

But as the ſupreme power can certainly o ten thouſand things more than it ught, ſo there are ſeveral things which me people may think it can do, al-ough it really cannot. For, it unfor-nately happens, that edicts which canot be executed, will not alter the nature of things. So, if a king and p liament ſhould pleaſe to enact, that a woman who hath been a month married, is virgo intacta, would that actually reſtore her to her primitive ſtate? If the ſupreme power ſhould reſolve a corporal of dragoons to be a doctor of divinity, law or phyſick, few, I believe, would truſt their ſouls, fortunes, or bodies to his direction; becauſe that power is neither fit to judge or teach thoſe qualifications which are abſolutely neceſſary to the ſeveral profeſſions. Put the caſe that walking on the ſlack rope were the only talent required by act of parliament for making a man a biſhop; no doubt, when a man had done his feat of activity in form, he might ſit in the Houſe of Lords, put on his robes and his rochet, go down to his palace, receive and ſpend his rents; but it requireth very little chriſtianity to believe this tumbler to be one whit more a biſhop than he was before; becauſe the law of God hath otherwiſe decreed; which law, although a nation may refuſe to receive, it cannot alter in its own nature.

And

And here lies the miſtake of this ſuperficial man, who is not able to diſtinguiſh between what the civil power can hinder, and what it can do. If the parliament can annul eccleſiaſtical laws, they muſt be able to make them, ſince no greater power is required for one than the other. See pref. p. 8. This conſequence he repeateth above twenty times, and always in the wrong. He affecteth to form a few words into the ſhape and ſize of a maxim, then trieth it by his ear, and, according as he likes the ſound or cadence, pronounceth it true. Cannot I ſtand over a man with a great pole, and hinder him from making a watch, although I am not able to make one myſelf. If I have ſtrength enough to knock a man on the head, doth it follow I can raiſe him to life again? The parliament may condemn all the Greek and Roman authors; can it therefore create new ones in their ſtead? They may make laws, indeed, and call them canon and eccleſiaſtical laws, and oblige all men to obſerve them under pain of high treaſon. And ſo may I, who love as well as any man to have in my own family the power in the laſt reſort, take a turnip, then tie a ſtring to it, and call it a watch, and turn away all my ſervants, if they refuſe to call it ſo too.

For my own part, I muſt confeſs that this opinion of the independent power of the church, or imperium in imperio, wherewith this writer raiſeth ſuch a duſt, is what I never imagined to be of any conſequence, never once heard diſputed among divines, nor remember to have read, otherwiſe than as a ſcheme in one or two authors of middle rank, but with very little weight laid on it. And I dare believe, there is hardly one divine in ten that ever once thought of this matter. Yet to ſee a large ſwelling volume written only to encounter this doctrine, what could one think leſs than that the whole body of the clergy were perpetually tiring the preſs and the pulpit with nothing elſe?

I remember ſome years ago a virtuoſo writ a ſmall tract about worms, proved them to be in more places than was generally obſerved, and made ſome diſcoveries by glaſſes. This having met with ſome reception, preſently the poor man's head was full of nothing but worms; all we eat and drink, all the whole conſiſtence of human bodies, and thoſe of every other animal, the very air we breathed, in ſhort, all nature throughout was nothing but worms: And, by that ſyſtem, he ſolved all difficulties, and from thence all cauſes in philoſophy. Thus it hath fared with our author, and his independent power. The attack againſt occaſional conformity, the ſcarcity of coffee, the invaſion of Scotland, the loſs of kerſeys and narrow cloths, the death of king William, the author's turning papiſt for preferment, the loſs of the battle of Almanza, with ten thouſand other misfortunes, are all owing to this imperium in imperio.

It will be therefore neceſſary to ſet this matter in a clear light, by enquiring whether the clergy have any power independent of the civil, and of what nature it is.

Whenever the chriſtian religion was embraced by the civil power in any nation, there is no doubt but the magiſtrates and ſenates were fully inſtructed in the rudiments of it. Beſides, the chriſtians were ſo numerous, and their worſhip ſo open before the converſion of princes, that their diſcipline, as well as doctrine, could not be a ſecret: They ſaw plainly a ſubordination of eccleſiaſtics, biſhops, prieſts, and deacons: That theſe had certain powers and employments different from the laity: That the biſhops were conſecrated, and ſet apart for that office by thoſe of their own order: That the preſbyters and deacons were differently ſet apart, always by the biſhops: That none but the eccleſiaſtics preſumed to pray or preach in places ſet apart for God's worſhip, or to adminiſter the Lord's Supper: That all queſtions relating either to diſcipline or doctrine, were determined in eccleſiaſtical conventions. Theſe and the like doctrines and practices, being moſt of them directly proved, and the reſt by very fair conſequences deduced from the words of our Saviour and his apoſtles, were certainly received as a divine law by every prince or ſtate which admitted the chriſtian religion: and, conſequently, what they could not juſtly alter afterwards, any more than the common laws of nature.

ture. And, therefore, although the ſupreme power can hinder the clergy or church from making any new canons, or executing the old; from conſecrating biſhops, or refuſe thoſe that they do conſecrate; or, in ſhort, from performing any eccleſiaſtical office, as they may from eating, drinking, and ſleeping; yet they cannot themſelves perform thoſe offices, which are aſſigned to the clergy by our Saviour and his apoſtles; or, if they do, it is not according to the divine inſtitution, and, conſequently, null and void. Our Saviour telleth us, His kingdom is not of this world; and therefore, to be ſure, the world is not of his kingdom, nor can ever pleaſe him by interfering in the adminiſtration of it, ſince he hath appointed miniſters of his own, and hath impowered and inſtructed them for that purpoſe: So that, I believe, the clergy, who, as he ſayeth, are good at diſtinguiſhing, would think it reaſonable to diſtinguiſh between their power, and the liberty of exerciſing this power. The former they claim immediately from Chriſt, and the latter from the permiſſion, connivance, or authority of the civil government; with which the clergy's power, according to the ſolution I have given, cannot poſſibly interfere.

But this writer, ſetting up to form a ſyſtem upon ſtale, ſcanty topics, and a narrow circle of thought, falleth into a thouſand abſurdities. And for a further help, he hath a talent of rattling out phraſes, which ſeem to have ſenſe, but have none at all: the uſual fate of thoſe who are ignorant of the force and compaſs of words, without which it is impoſſible for a man to write either pertinently or intelligibly upon the moſt obvious ſubjects.

So, in the beginning of his preface, page 4. he ſays, The church of England being eſtabliſhed by acts of parliament, is a perfect creature of the civil power; I mean the polity and diſcipline of it, and it is that which maketh all the contention; for as to the doctrines expreſſed in the articles, I do not find high church to be in any manner of pain; but they who lay claim to moſt orthodoxy can diſtinguiſh themſelves out of them. It is obſervable in this author, that his ſtyle is naturally harſh and ungrateful grateful to the ear, and his expreſſions mean and trivial; but whenever he goeth about to poliſh a period, you may be certain of ſome groſs defect in propriety or meaning: So the lines juſt quoted ſeem to run eaſily over the tongue; and, upou examination, they are perfect nonſenſe and blunder: To ſpeak in his own borrowed phraſe, what is contained in the idea of eſtabliſhed? Surely, not exiſtence. Doth eſtabliſhment give being to a thing? He might have ſaid the ſame thing of chriſtianity in general, or the exiſtence of God, ſince both are confirmed by acts of parliament. But, the beſt is behind: For, in the next line, having named the church half a dozen times before, he now ſays, he meaneth only the polity and diſcipline of it: As if, having ſpoke in praiſe of the art of phyſic, a man ſhould explain himſelf, that he meant only the inſtitution of a college of phyſicians into a preſident and fellows. And it will appear, that this author, however verſed in the practice, hath groſly tranſgreſſed the rules of nonſenſe, (whoſe property it is neither to affirm nor deny) ſince every viſible

aſſertion gathered from thoſe few lines is abſolutely falſe: For where was the neceſſity of excepting the doctrines expreſſed in the articles, ſince theſe are equally creatures of the civil power, having been eſtabliſhed by acts of parliament as well as the others. But the church of England is no creature of the civil power, either as to its polity or doctrines. The fundamentals of both were deduced from Chriſt and his apoſtles, and the inſtructions of the pureſt and earlieſt ages, and were received as ſuch by thoſe princes or ſtates who embraced chriſtianity, whatever prudential additions have been made to the former by human laws, which alone can be juſtly altered or annulled by them.

What I have already ſaid, would, I think be a ſufficient anſwer to his whole preface, and indeed to the greateſt part of his book, which is wholely turned upon battering down a ſort of independent power in the clergy; which few or none of them ever claimed or defended. But there being certain peculiarities in this preface, that very much ſet off the wit, the learning, the raillery, reaſoning and ſincerity ſincerity of the author; I ſhall take notice of ſome of them, as I paſs.——

But here I hope, it will not be expected, that I ſhould beſtow remarks upon every paſſage in this book, that is liable to exception for ignorance, falſhood, dulneſs, or malice. Where he is ſo inſipid, that nothing can be ſtruck out for the reader's entertainment, I ſhall obſerve Horace's rule:

Quæ deſperes tractata niteſcere poſſe, relinquas.

Upon which account I ſhall ſay nothing of that great inſtance of his candour and judgment in relation to Dr. Stillingfleet, who (happening to lie under his diſpleaſure upon the fatal teſt of imperium in imperio) is High-Church and Jacobite, took the oaths of allegiance to ſave him from the gallows *, and ſubſcribed the

articles only to keep his preferment: Whereas the character of that prelate is univerſally known to have been directly the reverſe, of what this writer gives him.

But before he can attempt to ruin this damnable opinion of two independent powers, he telleth us; page 6. It will be neceſſary to ſhew what is contained in the idea of government. Now, it is to be underſtood, that this refined way of ſpeaking was introduced by Mr. Locke; after whom the author limpeth as faſt as he is able. All the former philoſophers in the world, from the age of Socrates to ours, would have ignorantly put the queſtion, Quid eſt imperium? But now it ſeemeth we muſt vary our phraſe; and, ſince our modern improvement of human underſtanding, inſtead of deſiring a philoſopher to deſcribe or define a mouſe-trap, or tell me what it is; I muſt gravely aſk, what is contained in the Idea of a mouſe-trap? But then to obſerve how deeply this new way of putting queſtions to a man's ſelf, maketh him enter into the nature of things; his preſent buſineſs is to ſhew us, what is contained in the Idea of government. The company knoweth nothing of the matter, and would gladly be inſtructed; which he doth in the following words, p. 6.

It would be in vain for one intelligent being to pretend to ſet rules to the actions of another, if he had it not in his power to reward the compliance with, or puniſh the deviations from, his rules by ſome good, or evil, which is not the natural conſequence of thoſe actions; ſince the forbidding men to do or forbear an action on the account of that convenience or inconvenience which attendeth it, whether he who forbids it will or no, can be no more than advice.

I ſhall not often draw ſuch long quotations as this, which I could not forbear to offer as a ſpecimen of the propriety and perſpicuity of this author's ſtyle. And, indeed, what a light breaketh out upon us all, as ſoon as we have read theſe words! How thoroughly are we inſtructed in the whole nature of government? What mighty truths are here diſcovered; and how clearly conveyed to our underſtandings? And therefore let us melt this refined jargon into the Old Style for the improvement provement of ſuch, who are not enough converſant in the New.

If the author were one who uſed to talk like one of us, he would have ſpoke in this manner: "I think it neceſſary to give a full and perfect definition of government, ſuch as will ſhew the nature and all the properties of it; and my definition is thus: One Man will never cure another of ſtealing horſes, merely by minding him of the pains he hath taken, the cold he hath got, and the ſhoe-leather he hath loſt in ſtealing that horſe; nay, to warn him, that the horſe may kick or fling him, or coſt him more than he is worth in hay and oats, can be no more than advice. For the gallows is not the natural effect of robbing on the highway, as heat is of fire: and therefore, if you will govern a man, you muſt find out ſome other way of puniſhment, than what he will inflict upon himſelf."

Or, if this will not do, let us try it in another caſe (which I inſtanced before) and in his own terms. Suppoſe he had thought it neceſſary (and I think it was as much ſo as the other) to ſhew us what is contained in the Idea of a mouſe-trap, he muſt have proceeded in theſe terms. "It would be in vain for an intelligent Being, to ſet rules for hindering a mouſe from eating his cheeſe, unleſs he can inflict upon that mouſe ſome puniſhment, which is not the natural conſequence of eating the cheeſe. For, to tell her, it may lie heavy on her ſtomach; that ſhe will grow too big to get back into her hole, and the like, can be no more than advice: therefore, we muſt find out ſome way of puniſhing her, which hath more inconveniencies than ſhe will ever ſuffer by the mere eating of cheeſe." After this, who is ſo ſlow of underſtanding, as not to have in his mind a full and complete Idea of a mouſe trap? Well.—The Free-thinkers may talk what they pleaſe of pedantry, and cant, and jargon of ſchool-men, and inſignificant terms in the writings of the clergy, if ever the moſt perplexed and perplexing follower of Ariſtotle from Scotus to Suarez could be a match for this author.

But the ſtrength of his arguments is equal to the clearneſs of his definitions. For,

For, having moſt ignorantly divided government into three parts, whereof the firſt contains the other two; he attempteth to prove that the clergy poſſeſs none of theſe by a divine right. And he argueth thus, p. vii. As to a legiſlative power, if that belongs to the Clergy by divine right, it muſt be when they are aſſembled in Convocation: but the 25 Hen. VIII. c. 19. is a bar to any ſuch divine right, becauſe that Act makes it no leſs than a præmunire for them, ſo much as to meet without the king's writ, &c. So that the force of his argument lieth here; if the Clergy had a divine right it is taken away by the 25th of Henry the Eighth. And as ridiculous as this argument is, the preface and book are founded upon it.

Another argument againſt the legiſlative power in the clergy of England, is, p. viii. that Tacitus telleth us; that in great affairs, the Germans conſulted the whole body of the people. De minoribus rebus principes conſultant, de majoribus omnes: Ita tamen, ut ea quoque, quorum penes plebem arbitrium eſt, apud principes pertractentur. Tacitus de moribus et populis pulis Germaniæ. Upon which, Tindall obſerveth thus: De majoribus omnes, was a fundamental amongſt our anceſtors long before they arrived in Great Britain, and matters of religion were ever reckoned among their Majora. (See Pref. p. viii. and ix.) Now it is plain, that our anceſtors, the Saxons, came from Germany: It is likewiſe plain, that religion was always reckoned by the Heathens among their Majora: And it is plain, the whole body of the people could not be the clergy, and therefore, the clergy of England have no legiſlative power.

Thirdly, p. ix. They have no legiſlative power, becauſe Mr. Waſhington, in his Obſervations on the eccleſiaſtical juriſdiction of the kings of England, ſheweth from undeniable authorities, that in the time of William the Conqueror, and ſeveral of his ſucceſſors, there were no laws enacted concerning religion, but by the great council of the kingdom. I hope likewiſe, Mr. Waſhington obſerveth, that this great council of the kingdom, as appeareth by undeniable authorities, was ſometimes entirely compoſed of biſhops and clergy, and called the parliament, and often conſulted upon affairs of ſtate, as well as church, as it is agreed by twenty writers of three ages; and if Mr. Waſhington ſays otherwiſe, he is an author juſt fit to be quoted by Beaux.

Fourthly,—But it is endleſs to purſue this matter any further; in that, it is plain, the clergy have no divine right to make laws; becauſe Henry VIII, Edward VI, and queen Elizabeth, with their parliaments will not allow it them. Now, without examining what divine right the clergy have, or how far it extendeth; is it any ſort of proof that I have no right, becauſe a ſtronger power will not let me exerciſe it? Or, doth all, that this author ſays through his preface, or book itſelf, offer any other ſort of argument but this, or what he deduces the ſame way?

But his arguments and definitions are yet more ſupportable than the groſſneſs of hiſtorical remarks, which are ſcattered ſo plentifully in his book, that it would be tedious to enumerate, or to ſhew the fraud and ignorance of them. I beg the reader's leave to take notice of one here juſt

in my way; and, the rather, becauſe I deſign for the future to let hundreds of them paſs without further notice. When, ſays he, p. x. by the aboliſhing of the Pope's power, things were brought back to their antient channel, the parliament's right in making eccleſiaſtical laws revived of courſe. What can poſſibly be meant by this antient channel? Why, the channel that things ran in before the Pope had any power in England: that is to ſay, before Auſtin the monk converted England, before which time, it ſeems the parliament had a right to make eccleſiaſtical laws. And what parliament could this be? Why, the lords ſpiritual and temporal, and the commons met at Weſtminſter.

I cannot here forbear reproving the folly and pedantry of ſome lawyers, whoſe opinions this poor creature blindly followeth, and rendereth yet more abſurd by his comments. The knowledge of our conſtitution can be only attained by conſulting the earlieſt Engliſh hiſtories, of which thoſe gentlemen ſeem utterly ignorant, further than a quotation or an index. They would fain derive our government as now conſtituted, from antiquity: And, becauſe they have ſeen Tacitus quoted for his Majoribus omnes; and have read of the Goths military inſtitution in their progreſs and conqueſts, they preſently dream of a parliament. Had their reading reached ſo far, they might have deduced it much more fairly from Ariſtotle and Polybius, who both diſtinctly name the compoſition of Rex, Seniores, et Populus; and the latter, as I remember particularly, with the higheſt approbation. The princes in the Saxon Heptarchy, did indeed call their nobles ſometimes together upon weighty affairs, as moſt other princes of the world have done in all ages. But they made war and peace, and raiſed money by their own authority: They gave or mended laws by their charters, and they raiſed armies by their Tenures. Beſides, ſome of thoſe kingdoms fell in by conqueſts, before England was reduced under one head, and therefore could pretend no rights, but by the conceſſions of the conqueror.

Further, which is more material, upon the admiſſion of chriſtianity, great quantities

tities of land were acquired by the clergy, ſo that the great council of the nation was often entirely of churchmen, and ever a conſiderable part. But, our preſent conſtitution is an artificial thing, not fairly to be traced, in my opinion, beyond Henry I. Since which time it hath in every age admitted ſeveral alterations; and differeth now as much, even from what it was then, as almoſt any two ſpecies of government deſcribed by Ariſtotle. And, it would be much more reaſonable to affirm, that the government of Rome continued the ſame under Juſtinian, as it was in the time of Scipio, becauſe the ſenate and conſuls ſtill remained, although the power of both had been ſeveral hundred years transferred to the emperors.

Page xiv. paragraph 6. The clergy are not ſuppoſed to have any divine legiſlature, becauſe that muſt be ſuperior to all worldly power; and then the clergy might as well forbid the parliament to meet but when and where they pleaſe, &c. No ſuch conſequence at all. They have a power excluſive from all others. Ordained to act as clergy, but not govern in civil affairs; nor act without leave of the civil power.

Page xxv. The parliament ſuſpected the love of power natural to churchmen. Truly, ſo is the love of pudding, and moſt other things deſirable in this life; and in that they are like the laity, as in all other things that are not good. And, therefore, they are held not in eſteem for what they are like in, but for their virtues. The true way to abuſe them with effect, is to tell us ſome faults of their's, that other men have not, or not ſo much of as they, &c. Might not any man ſpeak full as bad of ſenates, diets, and parliaments, as he can do about councils; and as bad of princes, as he doth of biſhops?

Page xxxi. They might as well have made cardinals Campegi and de Chinuchii, biſhops of Saliſbury and Worceſter, as have enacted that their ſeveral ſees and biſhopricks were utterly void. No. The legiſlature might determine who ſhould not be a biſhop there, but not make a biſhop.

Ibid. Were not a great number deprived by parliament upon the reſtoration? Does he mean Preſbyters? What ſignifies that?

Ibid. Have they not truſted this power with our princes? Why, aye. But that argueth argueth not right, but power. Have they not cut off a king's head, &c. The church muſt do the beſt they can, if not what they would.

Page xxxvi. If tythes and firſt-fruits are paid to ſpiritual perſons as ſuch, the King or Queen is the moſt ſpiritual perſon, &c. As if the firſt-fruits, &c. were paid to the king, as tythes to a ſpiritual perſon.

Page xliii. King Charles II. thought fit that the biſhops in Scotland ſhould hold their biſhopricks during will and pleaſure; I do not find that high church complained of this as an encroachment, &c. No; but as a pernicious counſel of lord Loch.

Page xliv. The common Law Judges have a Power to determine, whether a man has a legal right to the Sacrament. They pretend it, but what we complain of as moſt abominable hardſhip, &c.

Page xlv. Giving men thus blindly to the Devil, is an extraordinary piece of complaiſance to a lay-chancellor. He is ſomething in the right; and therefore it is a pity there are any; and I hope the church will provide againſt it. But if the ſentence be juſt, it is not the perſon, but the contempt. And, if the author attacketh a man on the highway, and taketh but two-pence, he ſhall be ſent to the gallows, more terrible to him than the Devil, for his contempt of the Law, &c. Therefore he need not complain of being ſent to hell.

Page lxiv. Mr. Leſly may carry things too far, as it is natural, becauſe the other extreme is ſo great. But what he ſays of the king's loſſes, ſince the church lands were given away, is too great a truth, &c.

Page lxxvi. To which I have nothing to plead, except the zeal I have for the church of England. You will ſee ſome pages further, what he meaneth by the church; but it is not fair not to begin with telling us what is contained in the idea of a church, &c.

Page lxxxiii. They will not be angry with me for thinking better of the church than they do, &c. No, but they will differ from you; becauſe the worſe the queen is pleaſed, you think her better. I believe the church will not concern themſelves much about your opinion of them, &c.

Page

Page lxxxiv. But the Popiſh, Eaſtern, Preſbyterian and Jacobite Clergy, &c. This is like a general pardon, with ſuch exceptions as make it uſeleſs, if we compute it, &c.

Page lxxxvii. Miſapplying of the word Church, &c. This is cavilling. No doubt his project is for exempting the people: But that is not what in common ſpeech we uſually mean by the church. Beſides, who doth not know that diſtinction?

Ibid. Conſtantly apply the ſame ideas to them. This is, in old Engliſh, meaning the ſame thing.

Page lxxxix. Demonſtrates I could have no deſign but the promoting of truth, &c. Yes, ſeveral deſigns, as money, ſpleen, atheiſm, &c. What? will any man think truth was his deſign, and not money and malice? Doth he expect the houſe will go into a committee for a bill to bring things to his ſcheme, to confound everything, &c.

Some deny Tindall to be the author, and produce ſtories of his dullneſs and ſtupidity. But what is there in all this book, book, that the dulleſt man in England might not write, if he were angry and bold enough, and had no regard to truth?

REMARKS upon the BOOK, &c.

Page 4. WHETHER Louis XIV. has ſuch a power over Philip V? He ſpeaketh here of the unlimited, uncontroulable authority of fathers. A very fooliſh queſtion; and his diſcourſe hitherto, of government, weak and trivial, and liable to objections.

Ibid. Whom he is to conſider not as his own, but the Almighty's workmanſhip. A very likely conſideration for the ideas of the ſtate of nature. A very wrong deduction of paternal government; but that is nothing to the diſpute, &c.

Page 12. And as ſuch might juſtly be puniſhed by every one in the ſtate of nature. Falſe; he doth not ſeem to underſtand the ſtate of nature, although he hath borrowed it from Hobbes, &c.

Page 14. Merely ſpeculative points, and other indifferent things, &c. And why are ſpeculative

ſpeculative opinions ſo inſignificant? Do not men proceed in their practice according to their ſpeculations? So, if the author were a chancellor, and one of his ſpeculations were, that the poorer the clergy the better; would not that be of great uſe, if a cauſe came before him of tythes or church-lands?

Ibid. Which can only be known by examining whether men had any power in the ſtate of nature over their own, or others actions in theſe matters. No, that is a wrong method, unleſs where religion hath not been revealed; in natural religion.

Ibid. Nothing at firſt ſight can be more obvious, than that in all religious matters, none could make over the right of judging for himſelf, ſince that would cauſe his religion to be abſolutely at the diſpoſal of another. At his rate of arguing (I think I do not miſrepreſent him, and I believe he will not deny the conſequence) a man may profeſs heatheniſm, mahometaniſm, &c. and gain as many proſelytes as he can; and they may have their aſſemblies, and the magiſtrate ought to protect them, provided they do not diſturb the ſtate:

And

And they may enjoy all ſecular preferments, be lords chancellors, judges, &c. But there are ſome opinions in ſeveral religions, which, although they do not directly make men rebel, yet lead to it. Inſtance ſome. Nay we might have temples for idols, &c. A thouſand ſuch abſurdities follow from his general notions, and ill-digeſted ſchemes. And we ſee in the Old Teſtament, that kings were reckoned good or ill, as they ſuffered or hindered image worſhip and idolatry, &c. which was limiting conſcience.

Page 15. Men may form what clubs, companies, or meetings they think fit, &c. which the magiſtrate, as long as the public ſuſtains no damage, cannot hinder, &c. This is falſe; although the public ſuſtain no damage, they will forbid clubs, where they think danger may happen.

Page 16. The magiſtrate is as much obliged to protect them in the way they chuſe of worſhiping him, as in any other indifferent matter.—Page 17. The magiſtrate to treat all his ſubjects alike, how much ſoever they differ from him or one another in theſe matters. This ſhews, that although they be be Turks, Jews, or Heathens, it is ſo. But we are ſure chriſtianity is the only true religion, &c. and therefore it ſhould be the magiſtrate's chief care to propagate it; and that God ſhould be worſhiped in that form, that thoſe who are the teachers think moſt proper, &c.

Page 18. So that perſecution is the moſt comprehenſive of all crimes, &c. But he hath not told us what is concluded in the idea of perſecution. State it right.

Ibid. But here it may be demanded, if a man's conſcience make him do ſuch acts, &c. This doth not anſwer the above objection: For, if the public be not diſturbed with atheiſtical principles preached, nor immoralities, all is well. So that ſtill, men may be Jews, Turks, &c.

Page 22. The ſame reaſon which obliges them to make ſtatutes of mortmain, and other laws, againſt the people's giving eſtates to the clergy, will equally hold for their taking them away when given. A great ſecurity for property! Will this hold to any other ſociety in a ſtate, as merchants, &c. or only to eccleſiaſticks? A pretty project:

ject: Forming general ſchemes requires a deeper head than this man's.

Ibid. But the good of the ſociety being the only reaſon of the magiſtrates having any power over men's properties, I cannot ſee why he ſhould deprive his ſubjects of any part thereof, for the maintenance of ſuch opinions as have no tendency that way, &c. Here is a paragraph (vide alſo infra) which has a great deal in it. The meaning is, that no man ought to pay tythes, who doth not believe what the miniſter preacheth. But how came they by this property? When they purchaſed the land, they paid only for ſo much; and the the tythes were exempted. It is an older title than any man's eſtate is, and if it were taken away to-morrow, it could not without a new law belong to the owners of the other nine parts, any more than impropriations do.

Ibid. For the maintenance of ſuch opinions, as no ways contribute to the publick good. By ſuch opinions as the public receive no advantage by, he muſt mean chriſtianity.

Page 24. So the ſame reaſon as often as it occurs, will oblige him to leave that church. This is an excuſe for his turning papiſt.

Ibid. Unleſs you ſuppoſe churches like traps, eaſy to admit one; but when once he is in, there he muſt always ſtick, either for the pleaſure or profit of the trap-ſetters. Remark his wit.

Page 29. Nothing can be more abſurd than maintaining there muſt be two independent powers in the ſame ſociety, &c. This abominably abſurd; ſhew it.

Page 33. The whole hierarchy as built on it, muſt neceſſarily fall to the ground, and great will be the fall of this ſpiritual Babylon. I will do him juſtice, and take notice, when he is witty, &c.

Page 36. For if there may be two ſuch [independent powers] in every Society on Earth, why may there not be more than one in Heaven? A delicate conſequence.

Page 37. Without having the leſs, he could not have the greater, in which that is contained. Sophiſtical; inſtance wherein.

Page 42. Some ſince, ſubtler than the Jews, have managed commutations more to their own advantage, by enriching themſelves, and beggaring, if Fame be not a lyar, many an honeſt diſſenter. It is fair to produce witneſſes, is ſhe a lyar or not? The report is almoſt impoſſible. Commutations were contrived for roguiſh regiſters and proctors, and lay-chancellors, but not for the clergy.

Page 43. Kings and people, who (as the Indians do the Devil) adored the Pope out of fear. I am in doubt, whether I ſhall allow that for wit or no, &c. Look you, in theſe caſes, preface it thus: If one may uſe an old ſaying.

Page 44. One reaſon why the clergy make what they call ſchiſm, to be ſo heinous a ſin. There it is now; becauſe he hath changed churches, he ridiculeth ſchiſm; as Milton wrote for divorces, becauſe he had an ill wife. For ten pages on, we muſt give the true anſwer, that makes all theſe arguments of no uſe.

Page 60. It poſſibly will be ſaid, I have all this while been doing theſe gentlemen a great deal of wrong. To do him juſtice, he

he ſets forth the objections of his adverſaries with great ſtrength, and much to their advantage. No doubt thoſe are the very objections we would offer.

Page 68. Their executioner. He is fond of this word in many places, yet there is nothing in it further than it is the name for the hangman, &c.

Page 69. Since they exclude both from having any thing in the ordering of church matters. Another part of his ſcheme: For by this the people ought to execute eccleſiaſtical offices without diſtinction, for he brings the other opinion as an abſurd one.

Page 72. They claim a judicial power, and, by virtue of it the government of the church, and thereby (pardon the expreſſion) become traitors both to God and Man. Who doth he deſire to pardon him? or is this meant of the Engliſh clergy? ſo it ſeemeth. Doth he deſire them to pardon him? they do it as chriſtians. Doth he deſire the government to do it? but then how can they make examples? He ſays, the clergy do ſo, &c. ſo he means all.

Page 74. I would gladly know what they mean by giving the Holy Ghoſt. Explain what is really meant by giving the Holy Ghoſt, like a king impowering an ambaſſador *.

Page 76. The popiſh clergy make very bold with the three perſons of the Trinity. Why then, don't mix them, but we ſee whom this glanceth on moſt. As to the Conge d'Elire, and Nolo epiſcopari, not ſo abſurd; and, if omitted, why changed.

Ibid. A clergyman, it is ſaid, is God's ambaſſador. But you know an ambaſſador may have a ſecretary, &c.

Ibid. Call their pulpit ſpeeches, the word of God. That is a miſtake.

Page 79. Such perſons to repreſent him. Are not they that own his power, fitter to repreſent him than others? Would the author be a fitter perſon?

Ibid. Puft up with intolerable pride and inſolence. Not at all; for where is the pride to be employed by a prince, whom

ſo few own, and whoſe being is diſputed by ſuch as this author?

Ibid. Perhaps from a poor ſervitor, &c. to be a prime miniſter in God's kingdom. That is right. God taketh notice of the difference between poor ſervitors, &c. Extremely fooliſh—ſhew it. The argument lieth ſtrongly againſt the apoſtles, poor fiſhermen; and St. Paul, a tent-maker. So groſs and idle!

Page 80. The formality of laying hand over head on a man. A pun; but an old one. I remember, when Swan made that pun firſt, he was ſeverely checked for it.

Ibid. What is more required to give one a right, &c. Here ſhew, what power is in the church, and what in the ſtate, to make prieſts.

Page 85. To bring men into, and not turn them out of the ordinary way of ſalvation. Yes; but as one rotten ſheep doth miſchief——and do you think it reaſonable, that ſuch a one as this author, ſhould converſe with chriſtians, and weak ones.

Page 86. See his fine account of piritual puniſhment.

Page 87. The clergy affirm, that if they had not the power to exclude men from the church, its unity could not be preſerved. So to expel an ill member from a College, would be the way to divide the college; as in All-Souls, &c. Apply it to him.

Page 88. I cannot ſee but it is contrary to the rules of charity, to exclude men from the church, &c. All this turns upon the falſeſt reaſoning in the world. So, if a man be impriſoned for ſtealing a horſe, he is hindered from other duties: And, you might argue, that a man who doth ill, ought to be more diligent in minding other duties, and not to be debarred from them. It is for contumacy and rebellion againſt that power in the church, which the law hath confirmed. So a man is outlawed for a trifle, upon contumacy.

Page 93. The want of which means can only harden a man in his impenitence. It is for his being hardened that he is excluded. Suppoſe a ſon robbeth his father in the high-way, and his father will not ſee him till he reſtoreth the money and owneth eth his fault. It is hard to deny him paying his duty in other things, &c. How abſurd this!

Page 95. And that only they had a right to give it. Another part of his ſcheme, that the people have a right to give the ſacrament. See more of it. p. 135 and 137.

Page 96. Made familiar to ſuch practices by the Heathen prieſts. Well; and this ſhews the neceſſity of it for peace ſake. A ſilly objection of this and other enemies to religion, to think to diſgrace it by applying heatheniſm, which only concerns the political part wherein they were as wiſe as others, and might give rules. Inſtance in ſome, &c.

Page 98. How differently from this do the great pretenders to primitive practice act, &c. This a remarkable paſſage. Doth he condemn or allow this myſterious way? It ſeems the firſt—and therefore theſe words are a little turned, but infallibly ſtood in the firſt draught as a great argument for popery.

Page 100. They dreſs them up in a Sanbenito. So, now we are to anſwer for the Inquiſition. One thing is, that he makes the fathers guilty of aſſerting moſt of the corruptions about the power of prieſts.

Page 119. In the time of that wiſe Heathen Ammianus Marcellinus. Here he runs down all chriſtianity in general.

Page 120. I ſhall, in the following part of my diſcourſe, ſhew that this doctrine is ſo far from ſerving the ends of religion, that, 1. It prevents the ſpreading of the goſpel, &c. This independent power in the church is like the worms; being the cauſe of all diſeaſes.

Page 124. How eaſily could the Roman emperors have deſtroyed the church? Juſt as

as if he had ſaid; how eaſily could Herod kill Chriſt whilſt a child, &c.

Page 125. The people were ſet againſt biſhops by reaſon of their tyranny. Wrong. For the biſhops were no tyrants: Their power was ſwallowed up by the popes, and the people deſired they ſhould have more. It were the regulars that tyrannized and formed prieſtcraft. He is ignorant.

Page 139. He is not bound by the laws of Chriſt to leave his friends in order to be baptized, &c. This directly againſt the Goſpel.—One would think him an emiſſary, by his preaching ſchiſm.

Page 142. Then will the communion of ſaints be practicable, to which the principles of all parties, the occaſional Conformiſts only excepted, ſtand in direct oppoſition, &c. So that all are wrong but they. The ſcripture is fully againſt ſchiſm. Tindal promoteth it, and placeth in it all the preſent and future happineſs of man.

Page 144. All he has hitherto ſaid on this matter, with a very little turn, were arguments for popery: For, it is certain, that religion had ſhare in very few wars for for many hundred years before the reformation, becauſe they were all of a mind. It is the ambition of rebels, preaching upon the diſcontents of ſectaries, that they are not ſupreme, which hath cauſed wars for religion. He is miſtaken altogether. His little narrow underſtanding and want of learning.

Page 145. Though ſome ſay the high-flyer's lives might ſerve for a very good rule, if men would act quite contrary to them. Is he one of thoſe Some? Beſides the new turn of wit, &c. all the clergy in England come under his notion of high-flyers, as he ſtates it.

Page 147. None of them (Churchmen) could be brought to acknowledge it lawful upon any account whatever, to exclude the duke of York. This account falſe in fact.

Ibid. And the body politic, whether eccleſiaſtical or civil, muſt be dealt with after the ſame manner, as the body natural. What, becauſe it is called a body, and is a ſimile, muſt it hold in all circumſtances?

Page 148. We find all wiſe legiſlators have had regard to the tempers, inclinations, and prejudices, &c. This paragraph falſe.

—It

—It was directly contrary in ſeveral, as Lycurgus, &c.

Page 152. All the ſkill of the prelatiſts is not able to diſcover the leaſt diſtinction between biſhop and preſbyter. Yet, God knows, this hath been done many a time.

Page 158. The epiſtle to the Philippians is directed to the biſhops and deacons, I mean in due order after the people, viz. to the ſaints with their biſhops and deacons. I hope he would argue from another place, that the people precede the king, becauſe of theſe words: Ye ſhall be deſtroyed both you and your king.

Page 167. The pope and other great church dons. I ſuppoſe, he meaneth biſhops: But I wiſh, he would explain himſelf, and not be ſo very witty in the midſt of an argument; it is like two mediums; not fair in diſputing.

Page 168. Clemens Romanus blames the people not for aſſuming a power, but for making a wrong uſe of it, &c. His great error all along is, that he doth not diſtinguiſh between a power, and a liberty of exerciſing that power, &c. I would appeal to any man, whether the clergy have not not too little power, ſince a book like his, that unſettleth foundations and would deſtroy all, goes unpuniſhed, &c.

Page 171. By this or ſome ſuch method the biſhops obtained their power over their fellow preſbyters, and both over the people. The whole tenor of the goſpel directly contrary to it. Then it is not an allowable means: This carries it ſo far as to ſpoil his own ſyſtem; it is a ſin to have biſhops as we have them.

Page 172. The preſervation of peace and unity, and not any divine right, was the reaſon of eſtabliſhing a ſuperiority of one of the preſbyters over the reſt. Otherwiſe there would, as they ſay, have been as many ſchiſmatics as preſbyters. No great compliment to the clergy of thoſe days. Why ſo? It is the natural effect of a worſe independency, which he keepeth ſuch a clatter about; an independency of churches on each other, which muſt naturally create ſchiſm.

Page 183. How could the chriſtians have aſſerted the diſintereſtedneſs of thoſe who firſt preached the goſpel, particularly their having a right to the tenth part. Yes, that would

would have paſſed eaſy enough; for they could not imagine teachers could live on air; and their heathen prieſts were much more unreaſonable.

Page 184. Mens ſuffering for ſuch opinions is not ſufficient to ſupport the weight of them. This is a glance againſt chriſtianity. State the caſe of converting infidels; the converters are ſuppoſed few; the bulk of the prieſts muſt be of the converted country. It is their own people therefore they maintain. What project or end can a few converters propoſe? they can leave no power to their families, &c. State this, I ſay, at length, and give it a true turn. Princes give corporations power to purchaſe lands.

Page 187. That it became an eaſy prey to the barbarous nations. Ignorance in Tindall. The empire long declined before chriſtianity was introduced. This a wrong cauſe, if ever there was one.

Page 190. It is the clergy's intereſt to have religion corrupted. Quite the contrary; prove it. How is it the intereſt of the Engliſh clergy to corrupt religion? The more juſtice and piety the people people have, the better it is for them; for that would prevent the penury of farmers, and the oppreſſion of exacting covetous landlords, &c. That which hath corrupted religion, is the liberty unlimited of profeſſing all opinions. Do not lawyers render law intricate by their ſpeculations, &c. And phyſicians, &c.

Page 209. The ſpirit and temper of the clergy, &c. What does this man think the clergy are made of? Anſwer generally to what he ſays againſt councils in the ten pages before. Suppoſe I ſhould bring quotations in their praiſe.

Page 211. As the clergy, though few in compariſon of the laity, were the inventors of corruptions. His ſcheme is, that the fewer and poorer the clergy the better, and the contrary among the laity. A noble principle; and delicate conſequences from it.

Page 207. Men are not always condemned for the ſake of opinions, but opinions ſometimes for the ſake of men. And ſo, he hopes, that if his opinions are condemned, people will think, it is a ſpite againſt him, as having been always ſcandalous.

Page 210. The meaneſt layman as good a judge as the greateſt prieſt, for the meaneſt man is as much intereſted in the truth of religion as the greateſt prieſt. As if one ſhould ſay, the meaneſt ſick man hath as much intereſt in health as a phyſician, therefore is as good a judge of phyſick as a phyſician, &c.

Ibid. Had ſynods been compoſed of laymen, none of thoſe corruptions which tend to advance the intereſt of the clergy, &c. True. But the part the laity had in reforming, was little more than plundering. He ſhould underſtand, that the nature of things is this, that the clergy are made of men, and, without ſome encouragement, they will not have the beſt, but the worſt.

Page 215. They who gave eſtates to, rather than they who took them from, the clergy, were guilty of ſacrilege. Then the people are the church, and the clergy not; another part of his ſcheme.

Page 219. The clergy as they ſubſiſted by the alms of the people, &c. This he would have ſtill. Shew the folly of it. Not poſſible to ſhew any civilized nation ever did it. Who would be clergymen then?

then? The abſurdity appears by putting the caſe, that none were to be ſtateſmen, lawyers, or phyſicians, but who were to ſubſiſt by alms.

Page 222. Theſe ſubtle clergymen work their deſigns, who lately cut out ſuch a tacking job for them, &c. He is miſtaken — Every body was for the bill almoſt; though not for the tack. The biſhop of Sarum was for it, as appears by his ſpeech againſt it. But it ſeems, the tacking is owing to metaphyſical ſpeculations. I wonder whether is moſt perplexed, this author in his ſtyle, or the writings of our divines. In the judgment of all people our divines have carried practical preaching and writing to the greateſt perfection it ever arrived to; which ſhews, that we may affirm in general, our clergy is excellent, although this or that man be faulty. As if an army be conſtantly victorious, regular, &c. we may ſay, it is an excellent victorious army: But Tindall, to diſparage it, would ſay, ſuch a ſerjeant ran away; ſuch an enſign hid himſelf in a ditch; nay, one colonel turned his back, back, therefore, it is a corrupt, cowardly army, &c.

Page 224. They were as apprehenſive of the works of Ariſtotle, as ſome men are of the works of a late philoſopher, which, they are afraid, will let too much light into the world Yet juſt ſuch another; only a commentator on Ariſtotle. People are likely to improve their underſtanding much with Locke: It is not his Human Underſtanding, but other works that people diſlike, although in that there are ſome dangerous tenets, as that of [no] innate ideas.

Page 226. Could they, like the popiſh prieſts, add to this a reſtraint on the preſs, their buſineſs would be done. So it ought: For example, to hinder his book, becauſe it is written to juſtify the vices and infidelity of the age. There can be no other deſign in it. For, is this a way or manner to do good? Railing doth but provoke. The opinion of the whole parliament is, the clergy are too poor.

Ibid. When ſome nations could be no longer kept from prying into learning, this miſerable gibberiſh of the ſchools was con- trived. We have exploded ſchoolmen as much as he, and in ſome peoples opinion too much, ſince the liberty of embracing any opinion is allowed. They following Ariſtotle, who is doubtleſs the greateſt maſter of arguing in the world: But it hath been a faſhion of late years to explode Ariſtotle, and therefore this man hath fallen into it like others, for that reaſon, without underſtanding him. Ariſtotle's poetry, rhetorick, and politicks, are admirable, and therefore, it is likely, ſo are his logicks.

Page 230. In theſe freer countries, as the clergy have leſs power, ſo religion is better underſtood, and more uſeful and excellent diſcourſes are made on that ſubject, &c. Not generally. Holland not very famous, Spain hath been, and France is. But it requireth more knowledge, than his, to form general rules, which people ſtrain (when ignorant) to falſe deductions to make them out.

Page 232. Chap. VII. That this hypotheſis of an Independent power in any ſett of clergymen, makes all reformation unlawful, even where thoſe who have this power, do do conſent. The title of this chapter, a Truiſm.

Page 234. If God has not placed mankind in reſpect to civil matters under an abſolute power, but has permitted them in every ſociety to act as they judge beſt for their own ſafety, &c. Bad parallels; bad politicks; want of due diſtinction between teaching and government. The people may know when they are governed well, but not be wiſer than their inſtructers. Shew the difference.

Ibid. If God has allowed the civil ſociety theſe privileges can we ſuppoſe he hath leſs kindneſs for his church, &c. Here they are diſtinguiſhed then, here it makes for him. It is a ſort of turn of expreſſion, which is ſcarce with him, and he contradicts himſelf to follow it.

Page 235. This curſed hypotheſis had, perhaps, never been thought on with relation to civils, had not the Clergy (who have an inexhauſtible magazine of oppreſſive doctrines) contrived firſt in eccleſiaſticals, &c. The ſeventh paragraph furious and falſe. Were there no tyrants before the clergy, &c?

Page 236. Therefore in order to ſerve them, though I expect little thanks, &c. And, why ſo? Will they not, as you ſay, follow their intereſt? I thought you ſaid ſo. He has three or four ſprightly turns of this kind, that look, as if he thought he had done wonders, and had put all the clergy in a ferment. Whereas, I do aſſure him, there are but two things wonderful in his book: Firſt, how any man in a chriſtian country could have the boldneſs and wickedneſs to write it: And, how any government would neglect puniſhing the author of it, if not as an enemy of religion, yet a profligate trumpeter of ſedition. Theſe are hard words, got by reading his book.

Ibid. The light of nature as well as the goſpel, obliges people to judge of themſelves, &c. to avoid falſe prophets, ſeducers, &c. The legiſlature can turn out a prieſt, and appoint another ready made, but not make one; as you diſcharge a phyſician, and may take a farrier; but he is no phyſician, unleſs made as he ought to be.

Ibid. Since no more power is required for the one than the other. That is, I diſ-

like my phyſician, and can turn him off, therefore I can make any man a phyſician, &c. Cujus eſt deſtruere, &c. Jeſt on it: Therefore becauſe he lays ſchemes for deſtroying the church, we muſt employ him to raiſe it again. See, what danger lies in applying maxims at random. So, becauſe it is the ſoldiers buſineſs to knock men on the head, it is theirs likewiſe to raiſe them to life, &c.

237. It can belong only to the people to appoint their own eccleſiaſtical officers. This word People is ſo delicious in him, that I cannot tell what is included in the idea of the People. Doth he mean the rabble or the legiſlature, &c. In this ſenſe it may be true, that the legiſlature giveth leave to the biſhops to appoint, and they appoint themſelves; I mean, the executive power appoints, &c. He ſheweth his ignorance in government. As to High Church he carrieth it a prodigious way, and includeth, in the idea of it, more than others will allow.

proved by the biſhops or prieſts, &c. One of his principles to expoſe.

Ibid. If every one has not an inherent right to chuſe his own guide, then a man muſt be either of the religion of his guide, or, &c. That would make delicate work in a nation: What would become of all our churches? They muſt dwindle into conventicles. Shew what would be the conſequence of this ſcheme in ſeveral points. This great reformer, if his projects were reduced to practice, how many thouſand ſects, and conſequently tumults, &c. Men muſt be governed in ſpeculation, at leaſt not ſuffered to vent them, becauſe opinions tend to actions, which are moſt governed by opinions, &c. If thoſe who write for the church writ no better, they would ſucceed but ſcurvily. But to ſee whether he be a good writer, let us ſee when he hath publiſhed his ſecond part.

Page 253. An excellent author in his preface to the account of Denmark. This man judgeth and writeth much of a level. Moleſworth's preface full of ſtale profligate topicks. That author wrote his book in ſpite to a nation, as this doth to religion, and and both perhaps on poor perſonal piques.

Ibid. By which means, and not by any difference in ſpeculative matters, they are more rich and populous. As if ever any body thought that a difference in ſpeculative opinions made men richer or poorer; for example, &c.

Page 258. Play the Devil for God's ſake. If this is meant for wit, I would be glad to obſerve it; but in ſuch caſes I firſt look whether there be common ſenſe, &c.

Page 261. Chriſtendom has been the ſcene of perpetual wars, maſſacres, &c. He doth not conſider that moſt religious wars have been cauſed by ſchiſms, when the diſſenting parties were ready to join with any ambitious diſcontented men. The national religion always deſireth peace, even in her notions, for its intereſts.

Page 270. Some have taken the liberty to compare a high church prieſt in Politics to a monkey in a Glaſs ſhop, where, as he can do no good, ſo he never fails of doing miſchief enough. That is his modeſty, it is his own ſimile, and it rather fits a man that does ſo and ſo, (meaning himſelf.) Beſides the compariſon is fooliſh: So it is with men, as with ſtags.

Page 276. Their intereſt obliges them directly to promote tyranny. The matter is, that chriſtianity is the fault, which ſpoils the prieſts, for they were like other men, before they were prieſts. Among the Romans, prieſts did not do ſo; for they had the greateſt power during the republick. I wonder he did not prove, they ſpoiled Nero.

Page 277. No princes have been more inſupportable and done greater violence to the commonwealth than thoſe the clergy have honoured for ſaints and martyrs. For example in our country, the princes moſt celebrated by our clergy are, &c. &c. &c. And the quarrels ſince the conqueſt were nothing at all of the clergy, but purely of families, &c. wherein the clergy only joined like other men.

Page 279. After the reformation, I deſire to know whether the conduct of the clergy was any ways altered for the better, &c. Monſtrous miſrepreſentation. Does this man's man's ſpirit of declaiming let him forget all truth of fact, as here, &c? Shew it. Or doth he flatter himſelf, a time will come in future ages, that men will believe it on his word? In ſhort, between declaiming, between miſrepreſenting, and falſeneſs, and charging popiſh things, and independency huddled together, his whole book is employed.

Set forth at large the neceſſity of union in religion, and the diſadvantage of the contrary, and anſwer the contrary in Holland, where they have no religion, and are the worſt conſtituted government in the world to laſt. It is ignorance of cauſes and appearances which makes ſhallow people judge ſo much to their advantage. They are governed by the adminiſtration and almoſt legiſlature of Holland through advantage of property; nor are they fit to be ſet in balance with a noble kingdom, &c. like a man that gets a hundred pounds a year by hard labour, and one that has it in land.

Page 280. It may be worth enquiring, whether the difference between the ſeveral ſects in England, &c. A noble notion ſtarted, ſtarted, that union in the church muſt enſlave the kingdom; reflect on it. This man hath ſomewhere heard, that it is a point of wit to advance paradoxes, and the bolder the better. But the wit lies in maintaining them, which he neglecteth, and formeth imaginary concluſions from them, as if they were true and unconteſted.

He adds, That in the beſt conſtituted church, the greateſt good which can be expected of the eccleſiaſtics is from their diviſions. This is a maxim deduced from a gradation of falſe ſuppoſitions. If a man ſhould turn the tables, and argue that all the debauchery, atheiſm, licentiouſneſs, &c. of the times, were owing to the poverty of the clergy, &c. what would he ſay? There have been more wars of religion ſince the ruin of the clergy, than before, in England. All the civil wars before were from other cauſes.

Page 283. Prayers are made in the loyal Univerſity of Oxford, to continue the throne free from the contagion of ſchiſm. See Mather's Sermon on the 29th of May, 1705. Thus he ridicules the Univerſity while while he is eating their bread. The whole Univerſity comes with the moſt loyal addreſſes, yet that goes for nothing. If one indiſcreet man drops an indiſcreet word, all muſt anſwer for it.

Page 286. By allowing all, who hold no opinions prejudicial to the ſtate, and contribute equally with their fellow-ſubjects to its ſupport, equal privileges in it. But who denies that of the diſſenters? The The Calviniſt ſcheme, one would not think, proper for monarchy. Therefore, they fall in with the Scotch, Geneva, and Holland; and when they had ſtrength here, they pulled down the monarchy. But I will tell an opinion they hold prejudicial to the ſtate in his opinion; and that is, that they are againſt toleration, of which, if I do not ſhew him ten times more inſtances from their greateſt writers, that he can do of paſſive obedience among the clergy, I have done.

Does not juſtice demand, that they who alike contribute to the burden, ſhould alike receive the advantage? Here is another of his maxims cloſely put without conſidering what exceptions may be made. The papiſts papiſts have contributed doubly (being ſo taxed) therefore by this rule they ought to have double advantage. Protection in property, leave to trade and purchaſe, &c. are enough for a government to give. Employments in a ſtate are a reward for thoſe who entirely agree with it, &c. For example, a man, who upon all occaſions declared his opinion of a commonwealth to be preferable to a monarchy, would not be a fit man to have employments; let him enjoy his opinion, but not be in a capacity of reducing it to practice, &c.

Page 287. There can be no alteration in the eſtabliſhed mode of church diſcipline, which is not made in a legal way. Oh, but there are ſeveral methods to compaſs this legal way, by cunning, faction, induſtry. The common people, he knows, may be wrought upon by prieſts; theſe may influence the faction, and ſo compaſs a very pernicious law, and in a legal way ruin the ſtate; as king Charles I. began to be ruined in a legal way, by paſſing bills &c.

Page 288. As every thing is perſecution, which puts a man in a worſe condition than his neighbours. It is hard to think ſometimes whether this man is hired to write for or againſt diſſenters and the ſects. This is their opinion, although they will not own it ſo roundly. Let this be brought to practice: Make a quaker lord chancellor, who thinketh paying tythes unlawful. And bring other inſtances to ſhew that ſeveral employments affect the church.

Ibid. Great advantage which both church and ſtate have got by the kindneſs already ſhewn to diſſenters. Let them then be thankful for that. We humour children for their good ſometimes, but too much may hurt. Obſerve that this 64th paragraph juſt contradicts the former. For, if we have advantage by kindneſs ſhewn diſſenters, then there is no neceſſity of baniſhment, or death.

Page 290. Chriſt never deſigned the holy Sacrament ſhould be proſtituted to ſerve a party. And then people ſhould be bribed by a place to receive unworthily. Why, the buſineſs is, to be ſure, that thoſe who are employed employed are of the national church; and the way to know it is by receiving the ſacrament, which all men ought to do in their own church; and if not, are hardly fit for an office; and if they have thoſe moral qualifications he mentioneth, joined to religion, no fear of receiving unworthily. And for this there might be a remedy: To take an oath, that they are of the ſame principles, &c. for that is the end of receiving; and that it might be no bribe, the bill againſt occaſional conformity would prevent entirely.

Ibid. Preferring men not for their capacity, but their zeal to the church. The misfortune is, that if we prefer diſſenters to great poſts, they will have an inclination to make themſelves the national church, and ſo there will be perpetual ſtruggling; which caſe may be dangerous to the ſtate. For men are naturally wiſhing to get over others to their own opinion: Witneſs this writer, who hath publiſhed as ſingular and abſurd notions as poſſible, yet hath a mighty zeal to bring us over to them, &c.

Page 292. Here are two pages of ſcurrilous faction, with a deal of reflexions on great perſons. Under the notion of high-churchmen, he runs down all uniformity and church government. Here is the whole lower houſe of convocation, which repreſents the body of the clergy and both Univerſities, treated with rudeneſs by an obſcure, corrupt member, while he is eating their bread.

Page 294. The reaſon why the middle ſort of people retain ſo much of their antient virtue, &c. is becauſe no ſuch pernicious notions are the ingredients of their education; which 'tis a ſign are infinitely abſurd, when ſo many of the gentry and nobility can, notwithſtanding their prepoſſeſſion, get clear of them. Now the very ſame argument lies againſt religion, morality, honour, and honeſty, which are, it ſeems, but prejudices of education, and too many get clear of them. The middle ſort of people have other things to mind than the factions of the age. He always aſſigneth many cauſes, and ſometimes with reaſon, ſince he maketh imaginary effects. He quarrels at power being lodged in the clergy: When there is no reaſonable proteſtant, clergy, or laity, who will not readily own the inconveniencies by too great power and wealth, in any one body of men, eccleſiaſticks, or ſeculars: But on that account to weed up the wheat with the tares; to baniſh all religion, becauſe it is capable of being corrupted; to give unbounded licence to all ſects, &c.—And if hereſies had not been uſed with ſome violence in the primitive age, we ſhould have had, inſtead of true religion, the moſt corrupt one in the world.

Page 316. The Dutch, and the reſt of our preſbyterian allies, &c. The Dutch will hardly thank him for this appellation. The French huguenots, and Geneva proteſtants themſelves, and others, have lamented the want of epiſcopacy, and approved ours, &c. In this and the next paragraph, the author introduceth the arguments he formerly uſed, when he turned papiſt in king James's time; and loth to loſe them, he gives them a new turn; and they are the ſtrongeſt in his book, at leaſt have moſt artifice.

Page 333. 'Tis plain, all the power the biſhops have, is derived from the people, &c. In general the diſtinction lies here. The permiſſive power of exerciſing juriſdiction, lies in the people, or legiſlature, or adminiſtrator of a kingdom; but not of making him a biſhop. As a phyſician that commenceth abroad, may be ſuffered to practice in London or be hindered; but they have not the power of creating him a doctor, which is peculiar to a univerſity. This is ſome alluſion; but the thing is plain, as it ſeemeth to me, and wanteth no ſubterfuge, &c.

Page 338. A journeyman biſhop to ordain for him. Doth any man think, that writing at this rate, does the author's cauſe any ſervice? Is it his wit or his ſpleen that he cannot govern?

Page 364. Can any have a right to an office without having a right to do thoſe things in which the office conſiſts? I anſwer, the ordination is valid. But a man may prudentially forbid to do ſome things. As a clergyman may marry without licence or banns; the marriage is good; yet he is puniſhable for it.

Page 368. A choice made by perſons who have no right to chuſe, is an error of the firſt concoction. That battered ſimile again; this is hard. I wiſh the phyſicians had kept that a ſecret, it lieth ſo ready for him to be witty with.

Page 370. If preſcription can make mere nullities to become good and valid, the laity may be capable of all manner of eccleſiaſtical power, &c. There is a difference; for here the ſame way is kept, although there might be breaches; but it is quite otherwiſe, if you alter the whole method from what it was at firſt. We ſee biſhops: There always were biſhops: It is the old way ſtill. So a family is ſtill held the ſame, although we are not ſure of the purity of every one of the race.

Page 380. It is ſaid, That every nation is not a complete body politick within itſelf as to eccleſiaſticals. But the whole church, ſay they, compoſes ſuch a body, and Chriſt is the head of it. But Chriſt's headſhip makes Chriſtians no more one body politick with reſpect to eccleſiaſticals than to civils. Here we muſt ſhew the reaſon and neceſſity of the church being a corporation

all over the world: To avoid hereſies, and preſerve fundamentals, and hinder corrupting of ſcripture, &c. But there are no ſuch neceſſities in government, to be the ſame every where, &c. It is ſomething like the colleges in a univerſity; they all are independent, yet, joined, are one body. So a general council conſiſteth of many perſons independent of one another, &c.

However there is ſuch a thing as Jus Gentium, &c. And he that is doctor of phyſick, or law, is ſo in any univerſity in Europe, like the Reſpublica Literaria. Nor to me does there ſeem any thing contradicting, or improper in this notion of the catholick church; and for want of ſuch a communion, religion is ſo much corrupted, and would be more, if there were [not] more communion in this than in civils. It is of no import to mankind how nations are governed; but the preſerving the purity of religion is beſt held up by endeavouring to make it one body over the world. Something like as there is in trade. So to be able to communicate with all chriſtians we come among, is at laſt to be wiſhed and aimed at as much as we can.

Page 384. In a word, if the biſhops are not ſupreme. Here he reaſſumeth his arguments for popery, that there cannot be a body politick of the church through the whole world, without a viſible head to have recourſe to. Theſe were formerly writ to advance popery, and now to put an abſurdity upon the hypotheſis of a catholick church. As they ſay in Ireland, in king James's time, they built maſs-houſes which we make very good barns of.

Page 388. Biſhops are, under a præmunire, obliged to confirm and conſecrate the perſon named in the Conge d'Elire. This perhaps is complained of. He is permitted to do it. We allow the legiſlature may hinder if they pleaſe; as they may turn out chriſtianity, if they think fit.

Page 389. It is the magiſtrate who impowers them to do more for other biſhops than they can for themſelves, ſince they cannot appoint their own ſucceſſors. Yes they could, if the magiſtrate would let them.

Here

Here is an endleſs ſplutter, and a parcel of perplexed diſtinctions upon no occaſion. All that the clergy pretend to, is a right of qualifying men for the miniſtry, ſomething like what a univerſity doth with degrees. This power they claim from God, and that the civil power cannot do it as pleaſing to God without them; but they may chuſe whether they will ſuffer it or no. A religion cannot be crammed down a nation's throat againſt their will; but when they receive a religion, it is ſuppoſed they receive it as their converters give it; and, upon that foot, they cannot juſtly mingle their own methods, that contradict that religion, &c.

Page 390. With us the biſhops act only miniſterially and by virtue of the regal commiſſion, by which the prince firmly enjoins and commands them to proceed in chuſing, confirming, and conſecrating, &c. Suppoſe we held it unlawful to do ſo: How can we help it? but does that make it rightful, if it be not ſo? Suppoſe the author lived in a heathen country, where a law would be made to call chriſtianity idolatrous; would that be a topick for him to prove it ſo by, &c? And why do the clergy incur a premunire;—To frighten them—Becauſe the law underſtandeth, that, if they refuſe, the choſen cannot be a biſhop: But, if the clergy had an order to do it otherwiſe than they have preſcribed, they ought and would incur an hundred rather.

Page 402. I believe the catholic church, &c. Here he ridicules the Apoſtles Creed.—Another part of his ſcheme.—By what he ſays in theſe pages, it is certain, his deſign is either to run down chriſtianity, or or ſet up popery; the latter it is more charitable to think, and, from his paſt life, highly probable.

Page 405. That which gave the papiſts ſo great advantage was, clergymens talking ſo very inconſiſtent with themſelves, &c. State the difference here between our ſeparation from Rome, and the diſſenters from us, and ſhew the falſeneſs of what he ſayeth. I wiſh he would tell us what he leaveth for a clergyman to do, if he may not inſtruct the people in religion, and if they ſhould not receive his inſtructions.

Page 411. The reſtraint of the preſs a badge of popery. Why is that a badge of popery? Why not reſtrain the preſs to thoſe who would confound religion, as in civil matters? But this toucheth himſelf. He would ſtarve, perhaps, &c. Let him get ſome honeſter livelihood then. It is plain, all his arguments againſt conſtraint, &c. favour the papiſts as much as diſſenters; for both have opinions that may affect the peace of the ſtate.

Page 413. Since this diſcourſe, &c. And muſt we have another volume on this one ſubject of independency? Or, is it to fright us? I am not of Dr. Hickes's mind, Qu'il venge. I pity the readers, and the clergy that muſt anſwer it, be it ever ſo inſipid. Reflect on his ſarcaſtic concluſion, &c.

AN

CRAFTSMAN

Of Dec. 12. 1730.

On a very intereſting Subject relative to IRELAND.

To which is prefixed,

The CRAFTSMAN itſelf.

CRAFTSMAN.

No. 232. SATURDAY, Dec. 12, 1730.

THE following article, which hath lately appeared in the news-papers, deſerveth our immediate conſideration, viz.

"They write from Dublin, that an "officer from every regiment in the "French ſervice is arrived there, in order "to raiſe recruits for their reſpective "corps; which is not to be done in a "clandeſtine manner, as formerly, (when "ſeveral

" ſeveral perſons ſuffered death for it) but " publickly. Theſe gentlemen are to " diſperſe themſelves into the ſeveral " counties, where they have the beſt in- " tereſt; and a field officer is to reſide " conſtantly, at Dublin, to hear all com- " plaints, which may be made by any of " the recruits againſt their officers; and " alſo to prepare for ſending them off.— " Count BROGLIO hath been ſolliciting an " order to this purpoſe, theſe two years."

When I firſt read this account in the publick prints, I looked upon it as a common piece of falſe intelligence, and was in full expectation of ſeeing it contradicted in the next day's papers, according to frequent cuſtom; but having ſince heard it confidently affirmed to be true, (although I can hardly yet believe it; eſpecially, as to every part) the duty which I owe my country, and my zeal for the preſent eſtabliſhment, oblige me to take ſome notice of an affair, which I apprehend to be of very great importance to both.

It will be neceſſary, in the firſt place, to give the reader a ſhort account of the nature nature of theſe troops, as they are now eſtabliſhed in France.

They conſiſt, as we have been informed, of one regiment of horſe, and five regiments of foot, all doubly or trebly officered; ſo that they are, of themſelves, a very conſiderable body of men.

But their number is the leaſt point to be conſidered in this affair. There are other circumſtances, which render theſe troops infinitely more formidable to Great-Britain. They are not only all Roman-Catholicks, but the moſt dangerous of that communion, with reſpect to us, I mean Roman-Catholick ſubjects of our own dominions; many of whom have been obliged to fly their native country on account of rebellions and conſpiracies, in which they have been engaged; and all of them devoted by inclination, by intereſt, by conſcience, by every motive human and divine, to the ſervice of the Pretender, in oppoſition to the proteſtant ſucceſſion in his majeſty's royal family.

To this we may add, that they are generally eſteemed the beſt forces in the French

French ſervice; that they have always behaved themſelves as ſuch in the late wars; and are commanded by officers of approved courage, as well as great ſkill and experience in military affairs.

It is ſaid likewiſe, that the ſerjeants, corporals, and private men are ſo well ſeaſoned to danger, and expert in their duty, that, by a gradual promotion they could furniſh officers for a very formidable army, in caſe of any ſudden invaſion or inſurrection.

In the next place, it will not be improper to examine this affair with regard to our laws.

It is made felony, by act of parliament in Ireland, for any ſubject of that kingdom to inliſt himſelf, or to inliſt others, in the ſervice of any foreign ſtate; and it is well known that multitudes of poor wretches have ſuffered death upon that account.

We know it may be ſaid, that a power is reſerved to his majeſty, by a clauſe in that act, to diſpenſe with it, by granting any foreign prince a licence to raiſe forces in his dominions, and indemnifying his ſubjects from the penalties of the law.

Although it is far from my intention to diſpute any of his majeſty's legal prerogatives, or to call the wiſdom of the legiſlature in queſtion, yet I muſt take the liberty to obſerve, that ſuch powers have been ſometimes granted out of complaiſance to the crown, that the prince's hands may not be abſolutely tyed up, and in full confidence that they will never be exerted but for the benefit of this nation, or poſſibly of ſome proteſtant ally, upon great emergencies of ſtate. The exerciſe of the prerogative, in theſe caſes, is therefore merely a prudential part, which is left to the diſcretion of the prince and his miniſters, who ought always to be ſuppoſed the beſt judges of theſe affairs; and therefore how ridiculous would it be to ſend to the attorney-general for his opinion in ſuch a caſe, who can be a competent judge of nothing but the legality of it, and whether the affair be actionable or not; but miniſters ought to regulate their conduct, in theſe reſpects, according to the ſituation of affairs, and the exigencies of government.

I muſt therefore beg leave to conſider the preſent ſubject, of the Iriſh forces, in this light.

It will not be denied, I preſume, that a licence to recruit Roman Catholick regiments of Engliſh ſubjects, in foreign ſervice, and in the intereſt of a pretender to the crown, (which is death by the law, without his majeſty's permiſſion) is a favour of a very extraordinary nature, and ought to be attended with ſome extraordinary circumſtances. I confeſs that I can ſee no ſuch extraordinary circumſtances at preſent; unleſs it ſhould be ſaid that this favour was granted, in order to engage our good allies in the demolition of Dunkirk; but I hope they have more generoſity than to inſiſt upon ſuch hard terms for the effectual performance of that, which they are obliged by treaty to do. I am ſure, ſuch conditions ſeem unreaſonable on our part, after we have made them ſo many other conceſſions; particularly with relation to the flag and Santa Lucia; which, I think, are ſufficient to make them comply with all our demands, without expecting any farther farther favours, and even ſupererogation of friendſhip.

Perhaps my adverſaries (if they have any conceit) may take an opportunity of ridiculing me for writing in this ſtrain; but as it ſometimes ſerveth their turn to make me a great man, and to argue againſt me as ſuch, I will for once ſuppoſe myſelf ſo; and, methinks, if I had the honour of being but half an hour in that ſtation, I could reaſon againſt ſuch an order, for the good of my king and my country, in the following manner:

1. Theſe troops have always been made uſe of, whenever there hath been any attempt in favour of the Pretender; and indeed they are, upon many accounts, the fitteſt for this purpoſe. They are our fellow-ſubjects; they ſpeak our language; are acquainted with our manners; and do not raiſe that averſion in the people, which they naturally conceive againſt other foreign troops, who underſtand neither. I am afraid I may add, that they are kept up, for this purpoſe, in entire regiments, without ſuffering them to be mixed with the troops of any other nation.

nation. It is well known, at leaſt, that they ſupplied the late king JAMES with a nurſery of ſoldiers, who were always ready for his ſervice, whenever any opportunity offered itſelf for his reſtoration; and that, at this time, the Pretender is always the bait made uſe of by their officers to raiſe recruits. They never mention the king of France, or the king of Spain, upon theſe occaſions; but liſt the poor wretches under an aſſurance, that they are entered into the ſervice of him, whom they call their natural and rightful king I will not ſuſpect the preſent fidelity of France, and their cordiality to the proteſtant eſtabliſhment; yet methinks we might eaſily excuſe ourſelves from furniſhing them with inſtruments, which they may employ againſt us, whenever ambition, or reaſons of ſtate, ſhall diſſolve their preſent engagements, and induce them to eſpouſe the cauſe of the Pretender again.

2. It is very probable that his Catholic Majeſty (who hath likewiſe ſeveral regiments of this kind in his ſervice) will expect the ſame favour of recruiting them in Ireland! and that he may, in caſe of refuſal, make it a pretence, at any time, for quarrelling with us, interrupting our commerce, and diſturbing us again in the poſſeſſion of Gibraltar. And here it is proper juſt to take notice, that theſe troops did his Catholic Majeſty the moſt eminent ſervice in the laſt ſiege of that important place. He may complain, perhaps, of our partiality to France, and alledge, that we do not treat Spain in the ſame manner we expect to be treated by them, as one of the moſt favoured nations.

3. The kingdom of Ireland ſeemeth, at this time, in a very ill condition to admit of any ſuch draughts out of her dominions. She hath been already ſo much exhauſted by the voluntary tranſportation of multitudes of her inhabitants, (who have been prevailed upon, by the calamities of their own country, to ſeek their bread in other parts of the world) that the interpoſition of parliament was found neceſſary to put a ſtop to it; and ſhall we ſuffer any foreign power to drain her ſtill farther under ſuch circumſtances; eſpecially in this manner, and for this purpoſe?

purpoſe? I do not hear that this licence is confined to any particular number of men. It is confeſſed, I think, that they want above two thouſand men to complete their corps; and who knoweth but they may deſign to raiſe a great many more than they care to own; or even to form ſome new regiments of theſe troops? But ſuppoſing they are confined to a certain number of recruits, and that Ireland were in a capacity to ſpare them; it is well known how eaſily ſuch limitations are evaded, and how difficult it is to know when people conform exactly to the terms of their commiſſion. This was ſufficiently explained in the late famous controverſy, concerning Mr. * Wood's patent for ſupplying Ireland with a particular ſum of copper half-pence; and the arguments upon that ſubject may be applied to this, with ſome allowances for the difference between the two caſes. It may, perhaps, be ſaid likewiſe, that all the vigilance of the miniſtry hath been hitherto found ineffectual to prevent the French from clandeſtinely recruiting theſe regiments with Iriſh Catholics; and, therefore, that we may as well allow them to do it openly; nay, that it is our intereſt to let them purge Ireland of her popiſh inhabitants as much as they pleaſe; but I deny this for ſeveral reaſons, which I ſhall mention preſently; and if it were really the caſe, that the French can at any time recruit theſe troops clandeſtinely, I cannot ſee any reaſon why they ſhould ſollicit an order ſo preſſingly, for two years together, to do it openly, unleſs they have ſome other deſign. Ought not even this conſideration to put us a little upon our guard; and is it not a tacit confeſſion, that theſe troops are thought to be of more importance to them than we ought to wiſh? Beſides, are we to licence and authoriſe a miſchievous practice, becauſe we cannot totally prevent it? Every one juſtly applauded his majeſty's ſingular firmneſs and reſolution in ſupporting the rights of his German ſubjects, when an attempt was made to ſeduce ſome of them into the king of Pruſſia's ſervice, although perhaps it is impoſſible to prevent that practice practice entirely. We all remember that the inliſting a miller's ſon, and a few other ordinary peaſants, occaſioned ſuch a miſunderſtanding between the two crowns as proceeded almoſt to a rupture. Nor was the zeal of the Engliſh parliament backward on this occaſion; but, on this conſideration, amongſt others, reſolved to keep up a body of 12,000 Heſſian troops in our pay, which have already coſt us above a million of money. I am confident, therefore, that the ſame paternal care will always influence his majeſty to guard and protect his Britiſh ſubjects in the ſame manner; and, if any meaſure ſhould be taken, which ſavours too much of the French intereſt, and ſeemeth of dangerous conſequence to the intereſt of his family, the world can impute it to nothing but the deceitful repreſentations of thoſe, who lie under ſuch particular obligations to the court of France, that they can refuſe them nothing.

Such a licence ſeemeth to give encouragement to the people of Ireland to continue Roman Catholics; ſince they are ſure to meet with a proviſion both in the French and Spaniſh ſervice; whereas we always reject them in our troops, and abſolutely prohibit our officers to recruit in Ireland. Now, although it may not be ſafe to truſt them in our armies; yet certainly we ought not to give the leaſt encouragement to their entering into foreign ſervice; eſpecially into ſuch compact bodies as theſe regiments. And here it will not be amiſs to relate a ſtory much more to the honour of an Engliſh nobleman, who hath alſo one of the largeſt eſtates in Ireland of any man in the kingdom. When he went to viſit the invalids in France, a place in the nature of our Chelſea college here, all the Iriſh officers and ſoldiers of that hoſpital drew out in a body to do him particular honours. We can make no queſtion that their chief view was to have ſome preſent from his lordſhip; but though he hath an heart as well diſpoſed to generous charity as any man, and a purſe well able to anſwer the dictates of it; yet out of regard to his country, for which he hath likewiſe the moſt diſintereſted zeal, his anſwer to them was only this: "Gentle-

"men, I am very ſenſible of the honour "you have done me, and heartily pity "your misfortunes; but as you have "drawn them upon yourſelves, by ſerving "againſt your country, you muſt not "expect any relief or reward from me, "for having ſuffered in a ſervice, in "which I wiſh you had never engaged."

5. Is there not ſome reaſon to apprehend that this licence may, at one time or other, prove a ſnare to that country, and draw many people into their deſtruction; for, unleſs it is made perpetual, can it be ſuppoſed that all the poor ignorant wretches in the kingdom ſhould be apprized how long this licence is to be in force? or when they may liſt with impunity, and when they may not? Beſides, as it may be preſumed that theſe officers will never go, for the future, upon ſuch errands, without ſome pretended orders, when the real one is expired; ſo they will find it no difficult matter to impoſe ſuch a counterfeit upon illiterate people; who may thus incur the penalties of the law, without knowing any thing of the matter. Such a method of providing for perſons, whoſe principles render them unſerviceable in our army, is indeed a little more charitable than a late * project for preventing Iriſh children from being ſtarved, by fatting them up, and ſelling them to the butcher.

6. I have often heard that theſe troops have been made uſe of, in parliament, as an argument for keeping up a ſtanding army in England; and I think we need not take any meaſures to render that argument ſtronger. God knows, there are too many arguments always ready upon ſuch occaſions.

I might inſiſt upon ſome other points, which this affair naturally ſuggeſteth to a conſidering mind; particularly the danger of ſuffering ſeveral bigotted Iriſh papiſts, in foreign ſervice to diſperſe themſelves into thoſe counties where they have the beſt intereſt, and to ſtroll about Ireland amongſt their relations and old acquaintance, of the ſame principles with themſelves. Are we ſure that they will not make a bad uſe of this liberty by enquiring into the ſtrength of their party,

* See Vol. IV. of the author's work's.

by giving them hopes, and taking an opportunity to concert meaſures for the advantage of their cauſe? Have we no reaſon to apprehend that they may endeavour to raiſe ſeamen as well as ſoldiers, under colour of this order? Or engage great numbers of their countrymen to tranſport themſelves over to the French colonies and plantations in the Weſt-Indies, which are already grown formidable to the trading intereſt of Great-Britain in thoſe parts?

But whatever may be the motives to ſuch an extraordinary favour, or the conſequences of it, I am ſure it is the ſtrongeſt mark of our confidence in France, and ſuch an one as, I believe, they would not place in us, upon any occaſion. I will illuſtrate this by a parallel caſe.

The French proteſtants, who fled over hither from a perſecution on account of religion, never diſcovered any principles, which were incompatible with the civil government of France, nor ever ſet up any Pretender to the preſent royal family of that kingdom; and yet, if we ſhould think fit to form any conſiderable number of them into complete diſtinct regiments, to be compoſed of French proteſtants only, and commanded by French officers, without any incorporation of Britiſh ſoldiers, I fancy it would give our good allies ſome umbrage. But I am almoſt confident, that they would never permit us to ſend over a proteſtant French officer from every regiment to recruit their reſpective corps, by diſperſing themſelves into thoſe provinces where they have the beſt intereſt; or ſuffer a field officer, in Engliſh pay, to reſide conſtantly in Paris, and exerciſe a ſort of martial law in the capital of their dominions; I ſay, they would hardly ſuffer this, even though our ambaſſador ſhould ſollicit ſuch an order, with the utmoſt application, for twenty years together.

And yet the caſe of the Iriſh forces is much ſtronger with reſpect to us. They do not differ with us only in matters of religion; but hold principles abſolutely deſtructive of our civil government; and are generally looked upon abroad as a ſtanding army, kept on foot to ſerve the Pretender upon any occaſion.

I muſt aſk a queſtion or two, which naturally offer themſelves in this place.

What power is this field officer to exerciſe during his reſidence in Dublin? Is the French martial law to take place, if any of theſe recruits ſhould happen to repent of what they have done, and think fit to deſert?

Troops are generally armed as ſoon as they are liſted. Is this rule to be obſerved in the preſent caſe? If ſo, another queſtion occurreth. It hath been found neceſſary, for the ſecurity of Ireland, to reſtrain all Roman Catholics from wearing, or keeping any arms in their houſes. I aſk, therefore, whether the authority of this licence is to ſuperſede the laws of the land? I may go farther.

The garriſon of Dublin ſeldom conſiſteth of above 800 men for the duty of the place. Suppoſing double that number of popiſh recruits ſhould be brought thither, in order to be viewed by their field officer, will it be ſaid that there is no juſt apprehenſion of danger? but as theſe ſuggeſtions may appear to be founded on the

the infidelity of France (a caſe not to be ſuppoſed at preſent) I preſs them no farther.

I muſt however repeat it, that this order is the fulleſt demonſtration of the confidence we repoſe in them; and I hope they will ſcorn to make any bad uſe of it: But if it were poſſible to ſuſpect that they could have any deſign to play the knave with us, they could not wiſh for a better opportunity to promote it, than by ſuch a power as is now ſaid to be put into their hands.

I hope my remarks on this article of news will not be conſtrued in a Jacobite ſenſe, even by the moſt proſtitute ſcriblers of the preſent times; but I muſt beg leave to expoſtulate a little with the publick on that mean infamous practice, which theſe writers have lately uſed, in explaining ſome of my papers into treaſonable libels; taking an occaſion from hence to appear formally in defence of the throne, and laying it down, as a point granted, that there is an actual, concerted deſign of ſetting aſide the preſent eſtabliſhment. This is a practice which may be of great

ſervice to the real enemies of the preſent government; and every Jacobite in the kingdom may make uſe of it to publiſh the moſt explicit invectives on the king and his government, under the pretence of interpreting the implicit deſign of other writings. It is a practice, which was never allowed of till now, and ought never to be allowed; for whatever may be the ſecret meaning of any author, ſuch explanations are certainly libels, which may have a very bad effect upon weak minds, and are puniſhable by the laws, without any extraordinary methods of conſtruction. Theſe writers ought to remember the caſe of Sir RICHARD STEELE, who publiſhed the pretender's declaration, at the beginning of the late reign, with an anſwer annexed; and although he did it with a very good deſign, yet it was univerſally allowed to be contrary to law; and, if his principles of loyalty had not been very well known, might have involved him in a ſevere proſecution. I ſhall make no reflexions on thoſe, who encouraged ſuch explanations; and thoſe who are hired to do it, are beneath my notice.

notice. Let them empty all the trite common places of ſervile, injudicious flattery, and endeavour to make their court by ſuch nauſeous, diſhoneſt adulation, as, I am ſure, gives the moſt offence to thoſe perſons, to whom it is paid. Let them throw as much foul dirt at me as they pleaſe. Let them charge me with deſigns, which never entered into my thoughts, and cannot juſtly be imputed to me from any part of my conduct. God knoweth my heart, I am as zealous for the welfare of the preſent royal family as the moſt ſordid of theſe ſycophants. I am ſenſible, that our happineſs dependeth on the ſecurity of his majeſty's title, and the preſervation of the preſent government, upon thoſe principles, which eſtabliſhed them at the late glorious revolution; and which, I hope, will continue to actuate the conduct of Britons to the lateſt generations. Theſe have always been my principles; and whoever will give himſelf the trouble of looking over the courſe of theſe papers, will be convinced that they have been my guide: But I am a blunt, plain-dealing, old man, who

who am not afraid to ſpeak the truth; and as I have no reliſh for flattery myſelf, I ſcorn to beſtow it on others. I have not, however, been ſparing of juſt praiſe, nor ſlipt any ſeaſonable opportunity to diſtinguiſh the royal virtues of their preſent majeſties *. More than this I cannot do; and more than this, I hope, will not be expected. Some of my expreſſions, perhaps, may have been thought too rough and unpoliſhed for the climate of a court; but they flowed purely from the ſincerity of my heart; and the freedom of my writings hath proceeded from my zeal for the intereſt of my king and country.

With regard to my adverſaries, I will leave every impartial reader to judge, whether, even in private life, that man is not moſt to be depended upon, who, being inwardly convinced of the great and good qualities of his friend, never loadeth him with fulſome flatteries, but takes the honeſt liberty of warning him againſt the meaſures of thoſe who are endeavouring to miſlead him. The caſe is much ſtronger in publick life; and a crown is beſet with ſo many difficulties, that even a prince of the moſt conſummate wiſdom is not always ſufficiently guarded againſt the dangers, which ſurround him, from the ſtratagems of artful miniſters, or the blunders of weak ones. Both of them may be equally bad miniſters, and purſue the ſame methods of ſupporting themſelves, by flattering him into meaſures which tend to his deſtruction.

But it is time to draw to a concluſion; and I can only add, that if I were really engaged, in any deſign, contrary to the intereſt of the preſent eſtabliſhment, I ſhould have ſate down contented, and ſecretly rejoiced at the affair, which occaſioned this paper, inſtead of giving myſelf and the reader ſo much trouble. *C. THE

CRAFTSMAN.

SIR,

I DETEST reading your papers, becauſe I am not of your principles, and becauſe I cannot endure to be convinced. Yet I was prevailed on to peruſe your CRAFTSMAN of December the 12th, wherein I diſcover you to be as great an enemy of this country, as you are of your own. You are pleaſed to reflect on a project I propoſed of making the children of Iriſh parents to be uſeful to the publick inſtead of being burthenſome; and you venture to aſſert, that your own ſcheme is more charitable, of not permitting our popiſh natives to be liſted in the ſervice of any foreign prince.

Perhaps, Sir, you may not have heard of any kingdom ſo unhappy as this, both in their imports and exports. We import port a ſort of goods, of no intrinſic value, which it coſteth us above forty thouſand pounds a year to dreſs, and ſcour, and poliſh, which altogether do not yield one penny advantage; and we annually export above ſeven hundred thouſand pounds a year in another kind of goods, for which we receive not one ſingle farthing in return: Even the money paid for letters ſent in tranſacting this commerce being all returned to England. But now, when there is a moſt lucky opportunity offered to begin a trade, whereby this nation will ſave many thouſand pounds a year, and England be a prodigious gainer, you are pleaſed, without a call, officiouſly and maliciouſly to interpoſe with very frivolous arguments.

It is well known, that, about ſixty years ago, the exportation of live cattle from hence to England was of great benefit to both kingdoms, until that branch of traffick was ſtopt by an act of parliament on your ſide, whereof you have ſufficient reaſon to repent. Upon which account, when another act paſſed your parliament, forbidding the exportation of live men to any any foreign country, you were ſo wiſe to put in a clauſe, allowing it to be done by his majeſty's permiſſion, under his ſign manual, for which, among other great benefit granted to Ireland, we are infinitely obliged to the Britiſh legiſlature. Yet this very grace and favour you, Mr. D'ANVER, whom we never diſobliged, are endeavouring to prevent; which, I will take upon me to ſay, is a manifeſt mark of your diſaffection to his majeſty, a want of duty to the miniſtry, and a wicked deſign of oppreſſing this kingdom, and a traiterous attempt to leſſen the trade and manufactures of England.

Our trueſt and beſt ally the moſt Chriſtian king hath obtained his majeſty's licence, purſuant to law, to export from hence ſome thouſand bodies of healthy, young living men, to ſupply his Iriſh regiments. The king of Spain, as you aſſert yourſelf, hath deſired the ſame civility, and ſeemeth to have at leaſt as good a claim; ſuppoſing then that theſe two potentates will only deſire leave to carry off ſix thouſand men between them to France and Spain, then by computing the maintenance of a tall, hungry, ſ

man, in food and cloaths, to be onl five pounds a head, here will be th thouſand pounds per Annum ſaved c to the nation, for they can find no o employment at home, beſides begg robbing, or ſtealing. But, if thirty, fo or fifty thouſand, (which we could gl ſpare) were ſent on the ſame erra what an immenſe benefit it muſt b us? And, if the two princes, in wh ſervice they were, ſhould happen to b war with each other, how ſoon wo thoſe recruits be deſtroyed, then wh number of friends would the preter loſe, and what a number of popiſh e mies all true proteſtants get rid of? A to this, that then by ſuch a practice lands of Ireland, that want hands tillage, muſt be employed in graz which would ſink the price of wool, hides, butter, and tallow, ſo that Engliſh might have them at their c rates; and in return ſend us wheat make our bread, barley to brew our dri and oats for our horſes, without any bour of our own.

Upon this occaſion, I deſire humbly to offer a ſcheme, which, in my opinion, would beſt anſwer the true intereſts of both kingdoms: For, although I bear a moſt tender filial affection for England, my dear native country; yet, I cannot deny but this noble iſland hath a great ſhare in my love and eſteem, nor can I expreſs how much I deſire to ſee it flouriſh in trade and opulence, even beyond its preſent happy condition.

The profitable land of this kingdom is, I think, uſually computed at ſeventeen millions of acres, all which I propoſe to be wholly turned to grazing. Now, it is found by experience, that one grazier and his family can manage two thouſand acres. Thus, ſixteen millions eight hundred thouſand acres may be managed by eight thouſand four hundred families, and the fraction of two hundred thouſand acres will be more than ſufficient for cabbins, out-houſes, and potatoe-gardens; becauſe, it is to be underſtood, that corn of all ſorts muſt be ſent to us from England.

Theſe eight thouſand four hundred families may be divided among the four provinces, according to the number of houſes in each province; and, making the equal allowance of eight to a family, the number of inhabitants will amount to ſixty-ſeven thouſand two hundred ſouls; to theſe we are to add a ſtanding army of twenty thouſand Engliſh, which, together with their trulls, their baſtards, and their horſe-boys, will, by a groſs computation, very near double the count, and be very ſufficient for the defence and grazing of the kingdom, as well as to enrich our neighbours, expel popery, and keep out the Pretender. And leſt the army ſhould be at a loſs for buſineſs, I think it would be very prudent to employ them in collecting the publick taxes for paying themſelves and the civil liſt.

I adviſe, that all our owners of theſe lands ſhould live conſtantly in England, in order to learn politeneſs, and qualify themſelves for employments: But, for fear of increaſing the natives in this iſland, that an annual draught, according to the number born every year, be exported to whatever prince will bear the carriage, or tranſplanted to the Engliſh dominions on the American continent, as a ſcreen between his majeſty's Engliſh ſubjects and the ſavage Indians.

I adviſe likewiſe, that no commodity whatſoever, of this nation's growth, ſhould be ſent to any other country, except England, under the penalty of high treaſon; and that all the ſaid commodities ſhall be ſent in their natural ſtate, the hides raw, the wool uncombed, the flax in the ſtub; excepting only fiſh, butter, tallow, and whatever elſe will be ſpoiled in the carriage. On the contrary, that no goods whatſoever ſhall be imported hither, except from England, under the ſame penalty: That England ſhould be forced, at their own rates, to ſend us over cloaths ready made, as well as ſhirts and ſmocks to the ſoldiers and their trulls; all iron, wooden, and earthen ware; and whatever furniture may be neceſſary for the cabbins of graziers, with a ſufficient quantity of gin, and other ſpirits, for thoſe who can afford to get drunk on holydays.

As to the civil and eccleſiaſtical adminiſtration, which I have not yet fully conſidered, I can ſay little; only with regard to the latter, it is plain, that the article of paying tythe for ſupporting ſpeculative opinions in religion, which is ſo inſupportable a burthen to all true proteſtants, and to moſt churchmen, will be very much leſſened by this expedient; becauſe dry cattle pay nothing to the ſpiritual hireling, any more than imported corn; ſo that the induſtrious ſhepherd and cowherd may ſit, every man under his own blackberry buſh, and on his own potatoe-bed, whereby this happy iſland will become a new Arcadia.

I do likewiſe propoſe, that no money ſhall be uſed in Ireland, except what is made of leather, which likewiſe ſhall be coined in England, and imported; and that the taxes ſhall be levied out of the commodities we export for England, and there turned into money for his majeſty's uſe; and the rents to landlords, diſcharged in the ſame manner. This will be no manner of grievance, for we already ſee it very practicable to live without money, and ſhall be more convinced of it every day. But whether paper ſhall continue to ſupply that defect, or whether we ſhall hang up all thoſe who profeſs the trade of bankers, (which latter I am rather inclined to) muſt be left to the conſideration of wiſer politicians.

That which maketh me more zealouſly bent upon this ſcheme is my deſire of living in amity with our neighbouring brethren; for we have already tryed all other means, without effect, to that bleſſed end: And, by the courſe of meaſures taken for ſome years paſt, it ſhould ſeem that we are all agreed in the point.

This expedient will be of great advantage to both kingdoms, upon ſeveral accounts: For, as to England, they have a juſt claim to the balance of trade on their ſide with the whole world; and therefore our anceſtors and we, who conquered this kingdom for them, ought, in duty and gratitude, to let them have the whole benefit of that conqueſt to themſelves; eſpecially, when the conqueſt was amicably made, without bloodſhed, by ſtipulation between the Iriſh princes and Henry II. by which they paid him, indeed, not equal homage with what the electors of Germauy do to the emperor, but very near the ſame that he did to the king of France for his French dominions.

In conſequence of this claim from England, that kingdom may very reaſonably demand the benefit of all our commodities in their natural growth, to be manufactured by their people, and a ſufficient quantity of them for our uſe to be returned hither fully manufactured.

This, on the other ſide, will be of great benefit to our inhabitants the graziers, when time and labour will be too much taken up in manuring their ground, feeding their cattle, ſheering their ſheep, and ſending over their oxen fit for ſlaughter; to which employments they are turned by nature, as deſcended from the Scythians, whoſe diet they are ſtill ſo fond of. So Virgil deſcribeth it:

Et lac concretum cum ſanguine bibet equino.

Which, in Engliſh, is Bonnyclabber *, mingled with the blood of horſes, as they formerly did, until about the beginning of the laſt century; when luxury, under

the form of politeneſs, began to creep in, they changed the blood of horſes for that of their black cattle; and, by conſequence, became leſs warlike than their anceſtors.

Although I propoſed that the army ſhould be collectors of the public revenues, yet I did not thereby intend that thoſe taxes ſhould be paid in gold or ſilver; but in kind, as all other rent: For the cuſtom of tenants making their payments in money, is a new thing in the world, little known in former ages, nor generally practiſed in any nation at preſent except this iſland, and the Southern parts of Britain. But, to my great ſatisfaction, I foreſee better times; the ancient manner beginneth to be now practiſed in many parts of Connaught, as well as in the county of Corke, where the 'Squires turn tenants to themſelves, divide ſo many cattle to their ſlaves, who are to provide ſuch a quantity of butter, hides, or tallow, ſtill keeping up their number of cattle; and carry the goods to Corke, or other port-towns, and then ſell them to merchants. By which invention there there is no ſuch thing as a ruined farmer to be ſeen; but the people live with comfort on potatoes and bonnyclabber, neither of which are vendible commodities abroad.

WHEN Dr. Swift was at Sir Arthur Acheſon's at Markethill in the county of Armagh, an old gentleman was recommended to him, as being a remarkable cavalier in the reigns of Charles II. TO

READER.

THE author of theſe memoirs, capt. John Creichton, is ſtill alive, and reſides in the northern part of this kingdom. He is a very honeſt and worthy man; but of the old ſtamp; and, it is probable, that ſome of his principles will not reliſh very well in the preſent diſpoſition of the world. His memoirs are therefore to be received like a poſthumous work, and as containing facts, which very few alive, except himſelf, can remember: Upon which account, none of his generous ſubſcribers are, in the leaſt, anſwerable for many opinions, relating to the publick, both in church and ſtate, which he ſeems to juſtify, and in the vindication of which, to the hazard of his life, and the loſs of his fortune, he ſpent the moſt uſeful part of his days. Principles, as the world goes, are little more than faſhion; and the apoſtle tells us, that the faſhion of this world paſſeth away.

We

We read with pleaſure the memoirs of ſeveral authors, whoſe party we diſapprove, if they be written with nature and truth. Curious men are deſirous to ſee what can be ſaid on both ſides; and even the virulent flat relation of Ludlow, though written in the ſpirit of rage, prejudice and vanity, doth not want its advocates. This inclines me to think, that the memoirs of Capt. Creichton may not be unacceptable to the curious of every party; becauſe, from my knowledge of the man, and the teſtimony of ſeveral conſiderable perſons, of different political denominations, I am confident, that he hath not inſerted one paſſage or circumſtance, which he did not know, or, from the beſt intelligence he could get, believed to be true.

Theſe memoirs are therefore offered to the world in their native ſimplicity. And it was not with little difficulty, that the author was perſuaded by his friends to recollect and put them in order, chiefly for his own juſtification, and partly by the importunity of ſeveral eminent gentlemen, who

who had a mind that they ſhould turn to ſome profit to the author.

The captain having made over all his little eſtate to a beloved daughter, upon her marriage, on the condition of being entertained in her houſe for the ſmall remainder of his life, hath put it out of his own power, either to ſupply his incidental wants, to pay ſome long-contracted debts, or to gratify his generous nature in being further uſeful to his family; on which accounts, he deſires to return his moſt humble thanks to his worthy ſubſcribers; and hopes they will conſider him no further than as an honeſt, well-meaning man, who, by his own perſonal courage and conduct, was able to diſtinguiſh himſelf, under many diſadvantages, to a degree, that few private lives have been attended with ſo many ſingular and extraordinary events.

Beſides the great ſimplicity in the ſtyle and manner of the author, it is a very valuable circumſtance, that his plain relation corrects many miſtaken paſſages in other hiſtorians, which have too long paſſed for truths, and whoever impartially compares both, will probably decide in the captain's favour: For the memory of old men is ſeldom deceived, in what paſſed in their youth and vigour of age: And, if he hath, at any time, happened to be miſtaken in circumſtances of time or place (with neither of which I can charge him) it was certainly againſt his will. Some of his own perſonal diſtreſſes and actions, which he hath related, might be almoſt the ſubject of a tragedy.

Upon the whole, comparing great things to ſmall, I know not any memoirs that more reſemble thoſe of Philip de Comines (which have received ſo univerſal approbation) than theſe of Capt. Creichton, which are told in a manner equally natural, and with equal appearance of truth, although, I confeſs, upon affairs in a more obſcure ſcene, and of leſs importance.

THE former part of my life having been attended with ſome paſſages and events, not very common to men of my private and obſcure condition, I have (perhaps induced by the talkativeneſs of old age) very freely and frequently communicated them to ſeveral worthy gentlemen, who were pleaſed to be my friends, and ſome of them my benefactors. Theſe perſons profeſſed themſelves to be ſo well entertained with my ſtory, that they often wiſhed it could be digeſted into order, and publiſhed to the world, believing that ſuch a treatiſe, by the variety of incidents, written in a plain unaffected ſtyle, might be, at leaſt, ſome amuſement to indifferent readers; of ſome example to thoſe who deſire ſtrictly to adhere to their duty and principles; and might ſerve to vindicate my reputation in Scotland, where I am well known; that in point of truth, nor offend by malice

partiality. My memory, I thank God yet very perfect as to things long paſt, though, like an old man, I retain little of what hath happened ſince I gr into years.

I am likewiſe very ſenſible of an in mity in many authors, who write th own memoirs, and are apt to lay too mu weight upon trifles, which they are v enough to conceive the world to be much concerned in as themſelves; ye remember that Plutarch, in his lives

great men (which I have read in the Engliſh tranſlation) ſays, that the nature and diſpoſition of a man's mind may be often better diſcovered by a ſmall circumſtance, than by an action or event of the greateſt importance. And, beſides, it is not improbable that grey hairs may have brought upon me a vanity, to deſire that poſterity may know what manner of man I was.

I lye under another diſadvantage, and indeed a very great one, from the wonderful change of opinions, ſince I firſt made any appearance in the world. I was bred under the principles of the ſtricteſt loyalty to my prince, and in an exact conformity in diſcipline, as well as doctrine, to the church of England; which are neither altered nor ſhaken to this very day; and I am now too old to mend. However, my different ſentiments, ſince my laſt troubles after the revolution, have never had the leaſt influence either upon my actions or diſcourſe. I have ſubmitted myſelf with entire reſignation, according to St. Paul's precept, to the powers that be. I converſe equally with all parties, and am equally favoured by all; and, God knows, it is now of little conſequence what my opinions are, under ſuch a weight of age and infirmities, with a very ſcanty ſubſiſtence, which, inſtead of comforting, will hardly ſupport me.

But there is another point, which requires a better Apology than I am able to give: A judicious reader will be apt to cenſure me, and, I confeſs, with reaſon enough, as guilty of a very fooliſh Superſtition in relating my dreams, and how I was guided by them with ſucceſs, in diſcovering one or two principal Covenanters. I ſhall not eaſily allow myſelf to be, either by Nature or Education, more ſuperſtitious than other men; but I take the truth to be this: Being then full of Zeal againſt Enthuſiaſtical Rebels, and better informed of their lurking holes than moſt officers in the army, this made ſo ſtrong an impreſſion on my mind, that it affected my dreams, when I was directed to the moſt probable places, almoſt as well as if I had been awake, being guided in the night by the ſame Conjectures I had made in the day. There could poſſibly be be no more in the matter; and God forbid I ſhould pretend to a ſpirit of Divination, which would make me reſemble thoſe very hypocritical Saints, whom it was both my Duty and Inçlination to bring to juſtice, for their many horrid blaſphemies againſt God, Rebellions againſt their Prince, and Barbarities towards their Countrymen and Fellow-Chriſtians.

My great-grand-father, Alexander Creichton, of the houſe of Dumfries, in Scotland, in a feud between the Maxwells and the Johnſtons, (the chief of the Johnſtons, being the lord Johnſton, anceſtor of the preſent marquis of Annandale) ſiding with the latter, and having killed ſome of the former, was forced to fly into Ireland, where he ſettled near Kinard, then a woody-country, and now called Calidon: But within a year or two, ſome friends and relations, of thoſe Maxwells who had been killed in the feud, coming over to Ireland, to purſue their revenge, lay in wait for my grand-father in the wood, and ſhot him dead, as he was going to church. This accident happened about the time that James the ſixth of Scotland came to the crown of England.

Alexander, my great-grand-father, left two ſons, and as many daughters; his eldeſt ſon John lived till a year or two after the rebellion in 1641. His houſe was the firſt in Ulſter ſet upon by the Iriſh, who took and impriſoned him at Dungannon, but fortunately making his eſcape, he went to Sir Robert Stuart, who was then in arms for the king, and died in the ſervice.

This John, who was my grand-father, left two ſons, Alexander, my father, and a younger ſon, likewiſe named John, who being a child, but two or three years old at his father's death was invited to Scotland by the lady Dumfries, there educated by her, and ſent to ſea: He made ſeveral voyages to, and from Barbadoes, then ſettled in Scotland, where he died ſome time after the Reſtoration, leaving, beſide a daughter, one ſon, who, at my charges, was bred up a Phyſician, and proved ſo famous in his profeſſion, that he was ſent by her late majeſty Queen Anne, to cure the king of Portugal of the venereal diſeaſe.

diſeaſe. He had a thouſand pounds paid him in hand, before he began his journey; but when he arrived at Liſbon, the Portugueze council and phyſicians diſſuaded that king from truſting his perſon with a foreigner. However his majeſty of Portugal ſhewed him ſeveral marks of his eſteem; and, at parting, preſented him with a very rich jewel, which he ſold afterwards for five hundred guineas. He ſtayed there not above ſix weeks; during which time, he got conſiderable practice. After living many years in London, where he grew very rich, he died November 1726, and, as it is believed, without making a will, which is very probable, becauſe, although he had no children, he left me no legacy, who was his Couſin-German, and had been his greateſt Benefactor by the care and expence of his education. Upon this matter, I muſt add one circumſtance more, how little ſignificant ſoever it may be to others. Mr. Archdeacon Maurice being at London, in order to his journey to France, on account of his health, went to viſit the doctor, and put him in mind of me, urging ing the obligations I had laid upon him. The doctor agreed to ſend me whatever ſum of money the Archdeacon ſhould think reaſonable, and deliver it to him on his return from his travels; but unfortunately the doctor died two or three days before the archdeacon came back.

Alexander, my Father, was about eighteen years old in 1641. The Iriſh rebellion then breaking out, he went to captain Gerard Irvin, his relation, who was then captain of horſe, and afterwards knighted by king Charles the Second. This gentleman having a party for the king, ſoon after joined with Sir Robert Stuart in the county of Donegal; where, in the courſe of thoſe troubles, they continued ſkirmiſhing, ſometimes with the Iriſh rebels, and ſometimes with thoſe of the Engliſh parliament, after the rebellion in England began; till at length captain Irvin, and one Mr. Stuart, were taken priſoners, and put in goal in Derry; which city was kept for the parliament againſt the king, by Sir Charles Coote. Here my father performed a very memorable and gallant action, in reſcuing his his relation captain Irvin, and Mr. Stuart, I will relate this fact in all its particulars, not only becauſe it will do ſome honour to my Father's memory, but likewiſe becauſe, for its boldneſs and ſucceſs, it ſeems to me very well to deſerve recording.

My father having received information, that Sir Charles Coote, governor of Derry, had publicly declared, that captain Irvin and his companion ſhould be put to death, within two or three days, communicated this intelligence to ſeven truſty friends; who all engaged to aſſiſt him, with the hazard of their lives, in delivering the two gentlemen from the danger that threatened them. They all agreed that my father, and three more, at the hour of ſix in the morning, when the weſt-gate ſtood open, and the draw-bridge was let down, for the governor's horſes to go out to water, ſhould ride in, one by one, after a manner as if they belonged to the town, and there conceal themſelves in a friend's houſe till night; at which time my father was to acquaint captain Irvin, and his fellow-priſoner with their deſign, which was to this purpoſe: That, after concerting

certing meaſures at the priſon, my father ſhould repair to a certain place on the city-wall, and give inſtructions to the four without, at twelve at night: Accordingly, next morning, as ſoon as the gate was open, my father, with his three comrades, got into the town, and the ſame night having ſettled matters with the two gentlemen, that they ſhould be ready at ſix next morning, at which hour, he and his three friends ſhould call upon them; he then went to the wall, and directed the four, who were without, that as ſoon as they ſhould ſee the gate open, and the bridge drawn, one of them ſhould walk up to the centry, and ſecure him from making any noiſe, by holding a piſtol to his breaſt; after which, the other three ſhould ride up, and ſecure the room where the by-guard lay, to prevent them from coming out: Moſt of the garriſon were in their beds, which encouraged my father, and his friends, and much facilitated the enterprize: Therefore preciſely at ſix o'clock, when the by-guard and centry at the weſtern-gate were ſecured by the four without, my father and the

the other three within being mounted on horſeback, with one ſpare horſe, in the habit of town's-people, with cudgels in their hands, called at the goal-door, on pretence to ſpeak to captain Irvin, and Mr. Stuart. They were both walking in a large room in the goal, with the goaler, and three ſoldiers attending them; but theſe not ſuſpecting the perſons on horſeback before the door, whom they took to be inhabitants of the town, my father aſked captain Irvin, whether he had any commands to a certain place, where he pretended to be going; the captain made ſome anſwer, but ſaid they ſhould not go before they had drank with him; then giving a piece of money to one of the ſoldiers, to buy a bottle of ſack at a tavern a good way off, and pretending likewiſe ſome errand for another ſoldier, ſent him alſo out of the way. There being now none left to guard the priſoners but the goaler, and the third ſoldier; captain Irvin leapt over the hatch-door, and as the goaler lept after, my father knocked him down with his cudgel. While this was doing, Mr. Stuart tript up the ſoldier's dier's heels, and immediately leapt over the hatch. They both mounted, Stuart on the horſe behind my father, and Irvin on the ſpare one, and in a few minutes came up with their companions at the gate, before the mainguard could arrive, although it were kept within twenty yards of the goal-door.

I ſhould have obſerved, that as ſoon as captain Irvin, and his friend, got over the hatch, my father and his comrades put a couple of broad ſwords into their hands, which they had concealed under their cloaks, and at the ſame time drawing their own, were all ſix determined to force their way againſt any, who offered to obſtruct them in their paſſage; but the diſpatch was ſo ſudden, that they got clear out of the gate, before the leaſt oppoſition could be made. They were no ſooner gone, than the town was alarmed, Coote, the governor, got out of his bed, and ran into the ſtreets in his ſhirt, to know what the hubbub meant, and was in a great rage at the accident. The adventurers met the governor's groom, coming back with his maſter's horſes

from watering; they ſeized the horſes, and got ſafe to Sir Robert Stuart's, about four miles off, without loſing one drop of blood in this hazardous enterprize.

This gallant perſon (if I may ſo preſume to call my Father) had above twenty children by his wife Anne Maxwell, of the family of the earl of Niddiſdale, of whom I was the eldeſt; they all died young, except myſelf, three other boys, and two girls; who lived to be men and women. My ſecond brother I took care to have educated at Glaſgow, but he was drowned at two-and-twenty years old, in a ſtorm, on his return to Ireland. The other two died captains abroad, in the ſervice of king William.

I was born on the eighth day of May, 1648, at Caſtle-Fin in the county of Donegal. I made ſome ſmall progreſs in learning at the ſchool of Dungannon; but when I was eighteen years old, I very inconſiderately married Mrs. Elizabeth Delgarno, my ſchool-maſter's daughter, by whom I have had thirteen children, who all died young, except two daughters, married married to two brothers James and Charles Young, of the county of Tyrone.

Having been ſo very young when I married, I could think of no other courſe to advance my fortune, than by getting into the army. Captain Irvin, often mentioned already, had a brother who was a phyſician at Edinburgh, to whom he wrote in my favour, deſiring he would recommend me to the marquis of Atholl and others, then at the head of affairs in Scotland; this was in the year, 1674. There were then, but one troop of horſe-guards, (whereof the marquis was colonel) and one regiment of foot-guards, commanded by the earl of Linlithgow, in that kingdom; and they conſiſted chiefly of gentlemen.

Dr. Irvin, phyſician to the horſe-guards, accordingly preſented me to the marquis of Atholl, requeſting that I might be received into his troop. His lordſhip, pretending there was no vacancy, was, by the doctor threatened, in a free jeſting manner, with a doſe of poiſon, inſtead of phyſic, the firſt time he ſhould want his ſkill; Weell, weell then, quoth the marquis, quis, what is your friend's name? Deel tak' me, anſwered the doctor, gin I ken; whereupon I was called in, to write my name in the roll. I was then ordered to repair to the troop at Sterling, with directions to lieutenant colonel Cockburn, the commanding officer, to put me into which of the four ſquadrons, whereof the troops conſiſted, he thought fit. He thereupon placed me in his own, and appointed me my quarters.

Soon after this, the conventicles growing numerous in the weſt, ſeveral parties were drawn out to ſuppreſs them; among whom I never failed to make one, in hopes thereby to be taken notice of by my commanders, for I had nothing to recommend me, except my activity, diligence, and courage, being a ſtranger, and born out of that kingdom.

My firſt action, after having been taken into the guards, was, with a dozen gentlemen more, to go in queſt of Mas David Williamſon, a noted covenanter; ſince, made more famous in the book, called the Scotch preſbyterian eloquence. I had been aſſured, that this Williamſon did much frequent the houſe of my lady Cherrytree, within ten miles of Edinburg; but when I arrived firſt with my party about the houſe, the lady well knowing our errand, put Williamſon to bed to her daughter, diſguiſed in a woman's night-dreſs. When the troopers went to ſearch in the young lady's room, her mother pretended that ſhe was not well; and Williamſon ſo managed the matter, that when the daughter raiſed herſelf a little in the bed, to let the troopers ſee her, they did not diſcover him, and ſo went off diſappointed. But the young lady proved with child; and Williamſon to take off the ſcandal, married her in ſome time after. This Williamſon married five or ſix wives ſucceſſively, and was alive in the reign of queen Anne; at which time, I ſaw him preaching in one of the kirks at Edinburg. It is ſaid that king Charles the Second, hearing of Williamſon's behaviour in lady Cherrytrees houſe, wiſhed to ſee the man that diſcovered ſo much vigour, while his troopers were in Search of him: And, in a merry way, declared, that when he was in

in the royal-oak, he could not have kiſſed the bonnieſt laſs in Chriſtendom.

Some time after this, Thomas Dalziel, general of the forces in Scotland, an excellent ſoldier, who had been taken priſoner at the famous battle of Worceſter, and ſent priſoner to the Tower, eſcaping from thence into Muſcovy, was made general to the Czar; and returning home, after the reſtoration, was preferred, by the king, to be general of the forces in Scotland, in which poſt he continued till his death, which happened a little before the revolution. This general commanded fifty of the foot-guards, with an enſign, to accompany me, and to folly my directions, in the purſuit of a notorious rebel, one Adam Stobow, a farmer in Fife, near Colroſs. This fellow had gone through the Weſt, endeavouring to ſtir up ſedition in the people, by his great ſkill in canting and praying. There had been ſeveral parties ſent out after him, before I and my men undertook the buſineſs, but they could never diſcover him. We reached Colroſs at night, where I directed the enſign and all the men to ſecure three or four rebels, who were in the place, where I, with two or three of the ſoldiers to aſſiſt me, went to Stobow's houſe, about a mile and a half from Colroſs, by break of day, for fear ſome of his friends might give him notice. Before I got to the houſe, I obſerved a Kiln in the way, which I ordered to be ſearched, becauſe I found there an heap of ſtraw in the paſſage, up to the Kiln-pot. There I found Stobow lurking, and carried him to Colroſs, although his daughter offered me an hundred dollars to let him go. We returned immediately to the general at Edinburg, with Stobow and the priſoners taken by the enſign at Colroſs. They continued a while in confinement, but Stobow, at his trial, found friends enough to ſave his life, and was only baniſhed; yet he returned home a year after, and proved as troubleſome and ſeditious as ever, till, at the fight at Bothwell-Bridge, it was thought he was killed, for he was never heard of afterwards.

During the time I was in the guards, about two years after the affair of Mas David Williamſon, at the lady Cherrytrees, I was

I was quartered with a party at Bath-Gate, which is a ſmall village, twelve miles from Edinburg. One ſunday morning, by break of day, I and my comrade, a gallant highland gentleman, of the name of Grant, went out diſguiſed in grey coats and bonnets, in ſearch after ſome conventicle. We travelled on foot, eight or ten miles into the wild mountains, where we ſpied three fellows on the top of an hill, whom we conjectured to ſtand there as ſpies, to give intelligence of a conventicle, when any of the king's troopers ſhould happen to come that way. There they ſtood, with long poles in their hands, till I and my friend came pretty near, and then they turned to go down the hill: When we obſerved this, we took a little compaſs, and came up with them on the other ſide; whereupon they ſtood ſtill, leaning on their poles. Then I bounced forward upon one of them, and ſuddenly ſnatching the pole out of his hand, aſked him why he carried ſuch a pole on the Lord's-day, and at the ſame time knocked him down with it. My comrade immediately ſeized on the ſecond, and laid him flat by a gripe of his hair; but the third took to his heels, and ran down the hill. However, having left my friend to guard the two former I overtook the laſt, and felled him likewiſe; but the place being ſteep, the violence with which I ran, carried me a good way down the hill, before I could recover myſelf, after the ſtroke I had given; and by the time I could get up again to the place where he lay, the rogue had got on his feet, and was fumbling for a ſide piſtol, that hung at his belt, under his upper coat; which as ſoon as I obſerved, I fetched him to the ground a ſecond time with the pole, and ſeized on his piſtol; then leading him up to the other two, I deſired my friend to examine their pockets, and ſee whether they carried any powder or ball, but we found none.

We then led our priſoners down the hill, at the foot of which there was a bog, and on the other ſide a man ſitting on a rock; when we advanced near him, leaving our priſoners in the keeping of my friend, I ran up towards the man, who fled down on the other ſide. As

ſoon as I had reached the top of the rock, there appeared a great number of people, aſſembled in a glin, to hear the preaching of Mas John King, as I underſtood afterwards, whoſe voice was ſo loud, that it reached the ears of thoſe who were at the greateſt diſtance, which could not, I think, be leſs than a quarter of a mile; they all ſtanding before him and the wind favouring the ſtrength of his lungs. When my friend had brought the three priſoners to the top of the rock, where I waited for him; they all broke looſe and ran down to the conventicle: But my friend advancing within about forty yards of that rabble, commanded them in his majeſty's name to depart to their own homes. Whereupon about forty of their number with poles in their hands, drew out from the reſt, and advanced againſt us two, who had the courage, or rather the temerity, to face ſo great a company, which could not be fewer than a thouſand. As this party of theirs was preparing with their long poles, to attack me and my friend; it happened very luckily that a fine gelding, ſadled, and bridle with a pillion likewiſe upon him, came up near us, in ſearch for better graſs; I caught the horſe, and immediately mounted him, which the reſt of the conventiclers obſerving, they broke up and followed as faſt as they could, ſome on horſeback, and the reſt on foot, to prevent me from going off with the horſe; but I put him to the gallop, and ſuffering him to chuſe his own way through the mountain, which was full of bogs and hags, got out of reach. My friend kept up with me as long as he could, but having run a mile through ſuch difficult places, he was quite ſpent, and the conventiclers hard at his heels; whereupon he called to me for aſſiſtance, and I alighting put him upon the horſe, bidding him to make the beſt of his way to the laird of Poddiſhaw's about two miles off. By this time we ſaw twelve covenanters on horſeback, who advanced towards us by a ſhorter cut, and blocked up a gap, through which we were, of neceſſity, to paſs. I undertook to clear the gap for my friend, and running towards the rogues, with my broad-ſword and piſtol, ſoon forced them to open to the right and left: My comrade got through, and was purſued a good way; but he ſo laid about him, with his broad-ſword, that the purſuers being unarmed, durſt not ſeize him. In the mean time, I, who was left on foot, kept the covenanters, who followed me at a proper diſtance; but they pelted me with clods, which I ſometimes returned, 'till at laſt, after chaſing me above a mile, they ſaw a party of troopers in red, paſſing by, at ſome diſtance; and then they gave over their purſuit.

The troopers, obſerving my friend galloping and purſued, imagined he was ſome fanatic preacher, till they came to an old woman on a hill, whom my friend had deſired to deny his being gone that way; upon which they went off to their quarters, and he got ſafe to Poddiſhaw's, whither I ſoon after arrived. The laird of Poddiſhaw had been that day at church; from whence, returning with the laird of Pocammock, who lived about a mile off, they both wondered how the horſe got thither, for Pocammock was the owner of the horſe, and his lady had rode on it that day day to the conventicle, without her huſband's knowledge, having been ſeduced thither by ſome fanatic neighbours, for ſhe had never been at their meetings before. My friend and I acquainted the two lairds with the whole adventure of that day: And, after dinner, Pocammock requeſted to let him have the horſe home, thereby to ſtifle any reflexion his lady might bring upon him, or herſelf, by going to a conventicle; he likewiſe invited us to dine next day at his houſe, where the horſe ſhould again be delivered to me, as juſtly forfeited by the folly of his wife. We went accordingly with the laird of Poddiſhaw, and dined at Pocammock's, where the horſe was ordered to be led out into the court, in the ſame accoutrements as I found him the day before: But obſerving the lady in tears, I told her, that if ſhe would give me her promiſe, never to go to a conventicle again, I would beſtow her the horſe, and conceal what had paſſed; ſhe readily complied, and ſo the matter was made up. However, the laird her huſband aſſured me, that no horſe in Scotland ſhould be better paid for; and, being a leading leading man in the country, and his lady diſcovering the names of thoſe who had been at the conventicle, he ſent for them, and perſuaded them, as they valued their quiet, to make up a purſe for me and my friend, which they accordingly did; and we both lived plentifully a twelvemonth after, on the price of that horſe.

This adventure, making much noiſe at Edinburgh, was the occaſion of my being ſent for up thither, by the marquis of Atholl, my colonel, who in a very friendly manner, expoſtulated with me upon my raſhneſs; as indeed he hath too much reaſon to do; neither was I able to ſay any thing in my own juſtification. However, ſince what I had done, diſcovered my loyalty for my prince, my zeal for the church, and my deteſtation of all rebellious principles; his lordſhip ever after gave me many marks of his friendſhip.

Accordingly, theſe ſervices gave me ſo much credit with the general, that he promiſed to apply to the government, in my favour, for ſome preferment in the army, upon the firſt opportunity, which happened about a year afterwards. For the

the ſeditious humours in the weſt ſtill increaſing, it was thought proper, that three independent troops of horſe, and as many dragoons, ſhould be raiſed to ſuppreſs the rebels. Whereupon Mr. Francis Stuart, grandſon to the earl of Bothwell, a private gentleman in the horſe-guards, like myſelf, and my intimate acquaintance, was ſent for, in haſte, by the general; becauſe the council of Scotland was then writing to the king; that his majeſty would pleaſe to grant commiſſions to thoſe perſons, whoſe names were to be ſent up to London, that very night. Mr. Stuart gave me notice of this: Whereupon, although I was not ſent for, I reſolved to go up with him to Edinburgh, and ſollicit for myſelf. When I arrived there, and attended the general, his firſt queſtion was in a humourous manner, Wha the Deel ſent for you up? I anſwered, that I hoped his excellency would now make good his promiſe, of preferring me, ſince ſo fair an opportunity offered at preſent. On this occaſion the general ſtood my firm friend, and although the ſons and brothers of lords and baronets, and other perſons perſons of quality ſollicited to be made lieutenants and cornets, in theſe new raiſed troops, yet the general, in regard to my ſervices, prevailed with the council, that I might be appointed lieutenant to Mr. Stuart, who was then made captain of dragoons.

Soon after this, the archbiſhop of St. Andrews was murdered by the laird of Hackſton and Balfour, aſſiſted by four poor weavers. Hackſton, before this horrid action, was reputed an honeſt and gallant man; but his friendſhip for his brother-in-law Balfour, drew him in to commit this inhuman murder. Balfour, who had been the archbiſhop's chamberlain (for ſo in Scotland we call a great man's ſteward) whether by negligence or diſhoneſty, was ſhort in his payments to his lord; and the fear of being called to an account, was a principal motive to aſſaſſinate his maſter: however, he pretended likewiſe a great zeal for the kirk, whereof he looked upon the archbiſhop as the greateſt oppreſſor. It is certain, that the lower people, mortally hated the archbiſhop, on pretence that his grace had deſerted their

communion: And the weavers who were accomplices of Balfour, believed they did God ſervice in deſtroying an enemy of the kirk; and accordingly all the murderers were eſteemed and ſtyled ſaints, by that rebellious faction.

After the murder of the archbiſhop, ſeveral parties in the weſt took up arms, under the leading of Robert Hamilton, ſecond ſon to Sir William Hamilton, of Preſton, the unworthy ſon of a moſt worthy father: Whereupon the council met, and ſent for Graham, then laird of Clavers, afterwards created viſcount Dundee, by king James the Seventh. This noble perſon was, at that time, captain of one of thoſe independent troops of horſe, which, as I have already mentioned, were raiſed before the murder of the archbiſhop. The council therefore ordered him to march with a detachment of one hundred and twenty dragoons, and a lieutenant, with his own troop, in purſuit of the rebels. Clavers was obliged not to open his commiſſion, until he came in ſight of them. In his march he took Mas John King, one of their principal preachers.

Clavers

Clavers carried King along, until he came in ſight of the enemy, at Drumclog, eight miles from Hamilton. There the preacher was guarded by a dragoon-centry, at a little cabbin, on the top of the hill, while Clavers opening his commiſſion, found himſelf commanded to fight the rebels, let their number be ever ſo great, with thoſe hundred and twenty dragoons.

But before I proceed to tell the iſſue of this affair, I muſt digreſs a little upon the ſubject of Mas John King, above-mentioned. When I was in the guards, ſometime after I had miſſed Williamſon, at lady Cherrytree's houſe; the government hearing that this John King was beginning to hold his conventicles not far from Sterling, where the troop of horſe then lay, ordered the commanding officer there, to ſend a party out to take him, and bring him up to the council. I was pitched upon, with a ſmall detachment, to perform this ſervice. I went to my lord Cardroſſe's houſe, to whoſe lady, King was chaplain; there I took him and delivered him to the council. This preacher had gotten the lady's woman with with child, about four or five months before, and, it is ſuppoſed, had promiſed her marriage, provided the lady would ſtand his friend in his preſent diſtreſs; whereupon ſhe was ſo far his friend, as to get him bailed, on her engaging, he ſhould hold no more conventicles: However he went to the hills, and there preached the people to arms; and in ſeveral towns, as Kirkubry, Lanerick, and Sanchar in particular, in company with Cameron, ſet up declarations on the market-croſſes againſt the king, whom he excommunicated, with all his adherents. Thus he continued till Clavers took him at Drumclog, as is above-mentioned, where he got off again, until I took him a third time, after the battle of Bothwell-Bridge, which ſhall be related in its proper place.

The rebels at Drumclog were eight or nine thouſand ſtrong: Their leader, as I have ſaid before, was Robert Hamilton, ſecond brother to the loyal houſe of Preſton, but a profligate, who had ſpent all his patrimony. There were likewiſe among them the lairds of Knockgray and Fruah, with many other gentlemen of fortune, fortune, whoſe names I have forgot. Claver's men, with the addition of ſome few that came into him, did not exceed one hundred and eighty; yet purſuant to his orders, he was forced to fight the enemy; but being ſo vaſtly outnumbered, was ſoon defeated, with the loſs of cornet Robert Graham, and about eight or ten private troopers. The rebels finding the cornet's body, and ſuppoſing it to be that of Clavers, becauſe the name of Graham was wrought in the ſhirt-neck, treated it with the utmoſt inhumanity, cutting off the noſe, picking out the eyes, and ſtabbing it through in an hundred places.

Clavers, in his flight towards Hamilton and Glaſgow, rode an horſe that trailed his guts for two miles, from the place where the engagement happened, but then overtaking his groom with ſome led-horſes, he mounted one of them, and with the remains of his ſmall army, eſcaped to Glaſgow. The rebels, purſuing as far as Hamilton, advanced that evening within a mile of Glaſgow, where they encamped all night. As Clavers was marching after his men up the hill, where he had left Mas John King, under the guard of a dragoon, (who ran off with the firſt that fled) King, in a ſneering way, deſired him to ſtay, and take his priſoner with him.

The rebels being thus encamped within a mile of Glaſgow, Clavers commanded his men in the town, to ſtand to their arms all night; and having barricadoed the four ſtreets, to prevent the rebels horſe from breaking in, ordered me, at ſun riſe, to march with ſix dragoons, and diſcover which way the rebels intended to come into the town. I muſt here obſerve, that I, with captain Stuart's troop of dragoons, and a battalion of the foot-guards, remained in Glaſgow, while Clavers marched to Drumclog, where he was defeat d. But to return; I followed the directions which were given me, and having diſcovered the enemy from a little eminence, I was ordered by Clavers, who came to me there, to watch at a ſmall houſe, where the way divided, and ſee which of the roads they would take, or whether they ſeparated, and each party took a different way. I ſtayed until I

ſaw them take two different roads; ſome by that from whence I came from the town, which was over the Galligate-Bridge, and the reſt by the high-church and College, which was more than twice as far as the firſt party had to come, and conſequently could not both meet at the ſame time within the town. This was a great advantage to Clavers, and his little army. That party of the rebels, which took Galligate-Bridge road, followed me cloſe to the heels, as I returned to inform Clavers what courſe they took.

The broad ſtreet was immediately full of them, but advancing towards the barricade, before their fellows, who followed the other road, could arrive to their aſſiſtance, were valiantly received by Clavers and his men, who firing on them at once, and jumping over the carts and cars, that compoſed the barricade, chaſed them out of the town; but were quickly forced to return, and receive the other party; which, by that time, was marching down by the high-church and college; but when they came within piſtol-ſhot, were likewiſe fired upon, and driven out of the town. In this action many of the rebels fell, but the king's party loſt not ſo much as one man.

The town's-men being too well affected to the rebels, concealed many of them in their houſes; the reſt who eſcaped, met and drew up in a field behind the high-church, where they ſtayed until five in the afternoon, it being in the month of May, and from thence, marched in a body to the ſame place, where they were in the morning, about a mile off the town. Clavers and his men expecting they would make a ſecond attack, and diſcovering by his ſpies, whither they were gone, marched after them; but upon ſight of our forces, the rebels retired with a ſtrong rear-guard of horſe to Hamilton; whereupon Clavers returned, and quartered that night in Glaſgow.

Next morning, the government ſent orders to Clavers to leave Glaſgow, and march to Sterling, eighteen miles further; and three days after, he was commanded to bring up his party to Edinburgh: As ſoon as he quitted Glaſgow, the rebels returned, and having ſtayed in that town eight eight or ten days, encamped on Hamilton-Moor, within a mile of Bothwell-Bridge, where it was ſaid, that their numbers were increaſed to fourteen thouſand; although biſhop Burnet, in his Hiſtory of his own Times, moſt falſly and partially affirms, that they were not more than four thouſand, or thereabouts.

The council, finding the rebels daily increaſing, in their numbers, gave information thereof to the king; whereupon his majeſty ſent down the duke of Monmouth, with a commiſſion, to be commander in chief, and to take with him four troops of Engliſh dragoons, which were quartered on the borders: But theſe, with the forces in Scotland, amounted not to above three thouſand. Upon the duke's being made commander in chief, general Dalziel refuſed to ſerve under him, and remained at his lodgings in Edinburgh, till his grace was ſuperſeded, which happened about a fortnight after.

the 21ſt of June: from thence the whole forces marched to the kirk of Scots, within four miles of the rebels, where they lay that night. The next morning he marched the army up an eminence, oppoſite to the main body of the enemy, who were encamped on the Moor.

The general officers, the earl of Linlithgow, colonel of the foot guards, the earl of Mar, colonel of a regiment of foot, Clavers, the earl of Hume, and the earl of Ayrly, all captains of horſe, the marquis of Montroſe, colonel of the horſe-guards, (Atholl having been diſcarded) Dalhouſie, with many other noblemen, and gentlemen volunteers, attending the duke together, deſired his grace to let them know which way he deſigned to take to come at the enemy, the duke anſwered, it muſt be, by Bothwell Bridge. Now the bridge lay a ſhort mile to the right of the king's army, was narrow, and guarded with three thouſand of the rebels, and ſtrongly barricadoed with great ſtones; but although the officers were deſirous to have paſſed the river, by eaſy Fords, directly between them and the the rebels, and to march to their main body on the Moor, before thoſe three thouſand, who guarded the bridge, could come to aſſiſt them; yet the duke was obſtinate, and would paſs no other way, than that of the bridge.

Purſuant to this prepoſterous and abſurd reſolution, he commanded captain Stuart, (whoſe lieutenant I was) with his troop of dragoons, and eighty muſqueteers, together with four ſmall field-pieces, under cover of the dragoons, to beat off the party at the bridge: The duke himſelf, with David Leſly and Melvill, accompanied us, and ordered the field-pieces to be left at the village of Bothwell, within a muſket-ſhot of the bridge: When the duke and his men came near the bridge, the rebels beat a parley, and ſent over a laird accompanied with a kirk preacher. The duke aſking what they came for? was anſwered, 'That they would have 'the kirk eſtabliſhed in the ſame manner, 'as it ſtood at the king's reſtoration, and 'that every ſubject ſhould be obliged 'to take the ſolemn league and covenant.' The duke told them, their demand could not be granted, but ſent them back to tell their party, that if they would lay down their arms, and ſubmit to the king's mercy, he would intercede for their pardon.

While this parley laſted, the field pieces were brought down, and planted over againſt the bridge, without being perceived by the rebels. The meſſengers returned in a ſhort time, with this anſwer; That they would not lay down their arms, unleſs their conditions were granted them: Whereupon the dragoons and muſqueteers fired all at once, upon thoſe who guarded the bridge, and the field-pieces played ſo warmly, that ſome hundreds of the rebels were ſlain; the reſt flying to the main body, on the Moor.

The duke as ſoon as he had commanded to fire, retired into a hollow, from the enemies ſhot; ſome ſay by the perſuaſion of Leſly and Melvill, and continued there till the action was over. Then captain Stuart ordered the muſqueteers to make way for the horſe, to paſs the bridge, by caſting the ſtones into the river, which had been placed there to obſtruct the paſ-

ſage over it; but the army could not paſs in leſs than five hours; and then marched up in order of battle towards the enemy, who waited for them on the Moor, confiding in the great ſuperiority of their number. Clavers commanded the horſe on the right, and captain Stuart the dragoons on the left. The field-pieces were carried in the centre of the foot-guards, while the reſt of the officers commanded at the head of their men; and the duke, after the enemy was beaten from the bridge, rode at the head of the army.

Upon the firſt fire, the rebels horſe turned about, and fled upon the right and left; and although the duke ordered his men not to ſtir out of their ranks to purſue them, yet the army, not regarding his commands, followed the flying rebels, killing between ſeven and eight hundred, and taking fifteen hundred priſoners. Sir John Bell, provoſt of Glaſgow, as ſoon as he ſaw the rebels fly, rode into the town; from whence, in a few hours, he ſent all the bread he could find, together with an hogſhead of drink to each troop and company in the army, out of the cellars of ſuch town's-men as were found to be abettors or protectors of the rebels.

The cruelty and preſumption of that wicked and perverſe generation, will appear evident from a ſingle inſtance. Theſe rebels had ſet up a very large gallows, in the middle of their camp, and prepared a cart full of new ropes at the foot of it, in order to hang up the king's ſoldiers, whom they already looked upon as vanquiſhed and at mercy; and it happened, that the purſuers in the royal army, returning back with their priſoners, choſe the place where the gallows ſtood, to guard them at, without offering to hang one of them, which they juſtly deſerved, and had ſo much reaſon to expect. The purſuers were no ſooner returned, and the whole action over, than general Dalziel arrived at the camp from Edinburgh, with a commiſſion renewed to be commander in chief, which he received that very morning by an expreſs. This commander having learned how the duke had conducted the war, told him publickly, and with great plainneſs, that he had betrayed the king; that he heartily wiſhed wiſhed his commiſſion had come a day ſooner, for then, ſaid he, theſe rogues ſhould never have troubled his majeſty, or the kingdom any more.

Thus the duke was at the ſame time ſuperſeded, and publickly rebuked, before all the army; yet his grace forgot his dignity ſo far, as to ſneak among them at the town of Bothwell, (where the forces encamped) until the Saturday following; then all the troops marched back to Glaſgow, from whence in two or three days, they were ſent to their ſeveral quarters; after which the duke of Monmouth paſſed by Sterling to Fife to viſit the duke of Rothes.

The ſame evening after the rout on the Moor, the priſoners were ſent with a ſtrong guard towards Edinburgh. On Saturday morning, when the army was to march to Glaſgow, I deſired the general's leave to go with twelve dragoons, in ſearch of ſome of the rebels, who might probably paſs the Clyde, about Dunbarton, to ſhelter themſelves in the Highlands. With theſe dragoons, clad in grey coats and bonnets, I made haſte down the ſide

of the river; and about midnight after travelling twenty-four miles, I came to a church, and while the ſoldiers ſtayed to refreſh their horſes in the church-yard, I ſpied a country-fellow, going by, and aſked him in his own dialect, whither gang ye this time of night? He anſwered, wha are ye that ſpeers? I replied, we are your ane Fo'ke: Upon this the fellow came up, and told me, there were eighteen friends, with horſes, at an old caſtle, waiting for a boat to paſs over into the iſle of Arran. I mounted the man behind one of my dragoons, and went towards the place: But the rebels not finding a boat, were gone off, and the guide diſmiſſed. There was a great dew on the graſs, which directed me and my party to follow the track of their horſes, for three or four miles, till the dew was gone off; I then enquired of a cow-herd on a hill, whether he ſaw any of our poor Fo'ke travelling that way; he anſwered, that they had ſeparated on that hill, and gone three ſeveral ways, ſix in a party; adding, that in one party there was a bra, muckle kerl, with a white hat

on him, and a great bob of ribbons on the cock o't. Whereupon I ſent four of my dragoons after one party, four more after another; and myſelf, with the remaining four, went in purſuit of him with the white hat. As I went forward, I met another cow-herd, who told me, that the fellow with the hat, and one more, (for as the rogues advanced further into the Weſt, they ſtill divided into ſmaller parties) were juſt gone done the hill, to his maſter's houſe. The good man of the houſe returning, from putting the horſes to graſs in the garden, was going to ſhut the door; whereupon myſelf and two of the dragoons commanded him, with our piſtols at his breaſt, to lead us to the room where the man lay, who wore a white hat. We entered the room, and before he awaked, I took away his arms, and commanded him to dreſs immediately: Then finding his companion aſleep in the barn, I forced him likewiſe to ariſe, and mounting them both on their own horſes, came at nine o'clock in the morning, with my two priſoners, to the other dragoons, at the place where we appointed appointed to meet. From thence we rode ſtrait to Glaſgow, and arrived thither about eight in the evening, after a journey of fifty miles, ſince we left the army at Bothwell the day before.

This was upon a Sunday, and although we met with many hundreds of people on the road, yet we travelled on to Glaſgow, without any oppoſition. I muſt here inform the reader, that although I had once before taken this very man, who wore the white hat, yet I did not know him to be Mas John King already mentioned, until I was told ſo by the man of the houſe where I found him. I likewiſe forgot to mention, that King who knew me well enough, as ſoon as he was taken in the houſe, entreated me to ſhew him ſome favour, becauſe he had married a woman of my name; I anſwered, That is true, but firſt you got her with bairn, and ſhall therefore now pay for diſgracing one of my name.

When we arrived near Glaſgow, I ſent a dragoon to inform the general, that Mas John King was coming to kiſs his hand; whereupon his excellency, accompanied with all the noblemen and officers, advanced as far as the bridge, to welcome me and my priſoner; where it is very obſervable, that Graham, laird of Clavers, who came among the reſt, made not the leaſt reproach to Mas John, in return of his inſolent behaviour, when that commander fled from Drumclog. Mas John was ſent to Edinburgh next morning, under a guard, and hanged ſoon after. From hence I went to my quarters in Lanerick ſixteen miles from Glaſgow; and about a month after, (I hope the reader will excuſe my weakneſs) I happened to dream that I found one Wilſon, a captain among the rebels, at Bothwell-Bridge, in a bank of wood, upon the river Clyde. This accident made ſo ſtrong an impreſſion on my mind, that as ſoon as I awaked, I took ſix and thirty dragoons, and got to the place by break of day; then I cauſed ſome of them to alight, and go into the wood, and ſet him up as hounds do a hare, while the reſt were ordered to ſtand centry to prevent his eſcape. It ſeems I dreamt fortunately, for Wilſon was actually in the wood, with five five more of his company, as we afterwards learned; who all ſeeing me and my party advancing, hid themſelves in a little iſland on the river, among the broom that grew upon it. Wilſon had not the good fortune to eſcape; for as he was trying to get out of one copſe into another, I met him, and gueſſing by his good cloaths, and by the deſcription I had received of him before, that we was the man I looked for; I ſeized and brought him to my quarters; and from thence immediately conveyed him to Edinburgh, where he was hanged; but might have preſerved his life, if he would have condeſcended only to ſay, God ſave the King. This he utterly refuſed to do, and thereby loſt not only his life, but likewiſe an eſtate, worth twenty-nine thouſand marks Scots.

For this ſervice, the duke of Queenſbury, then high commiſſioner of Scotland, recommended me to the king, who rewarded me with the gift of Wilſon's eſtate; but although the grant paſſed the ſeals, and the ſheriff put me in poſſeſſion, yet I could neither ſell it nor lett it; no body body daring, for fear of the rebels who had eſcaped at Bothwell Bridge, either to purchaſe or farm it; by which means I never got a penny by the grant; and at the revolution the land was taken from me and reſtored to Wilſon's heirs.

The winter following, general Dalziel, with a battalion of the earl of Linlithgow's guards, the earl of Ayrly's troop of horſe, and captain Stuart's troop of dragoons, quartered at Kilmarnock, in the Weſt, fifty miles from Edinburgh. Here the general, one day, happening to look on, while I was exerciſing the troop of dragoons, aſked me, when I had done, whether I knew any of my men, who was ſkilful in praying well in the ſtyle and tone of the covenanters? I immediately thought upon one James Gibb, who had been born in Ireland, and whom I made a dragoon. This man I brought to the general, aſſuring his excellency, that if I had raked hell, I could not find his match for his ſkill in mimicking the covenanters. Whereupon the general gave him five pounds, to buy him a great coat and a bonnet, and commanded him to find out the rebels, but to be ſure to take care of himſelf among them. The dragoon went eight miles off that very night, and got admittance into the houſe of a notorious rebel, pretending he came from Ireland out of zeal for the cauſe, to aſſiſt at the fight of Bothwell-Bridge, and could not find an opportunity ſince, of returning to Ireland with ſafety; he ſaid he durſt not be ſeen in the day time, and therefore, after bewitching the family with his gifts of praying, he was conveyed in the duſk of the evening, with a guide to the houſe of the next adjoining rebel; and thus in the ſame manner, from one to another, till in a month's time he got through the principal of them in the Weſt; telling the general, at his return, that wherever he came, he made the old wives, in their devout fits, tear off their biggonets and mutches; he likewiſe gave the general a liſt of their names and places of their abodes, and, into the bargain, brought back a good purſe of money in his pocket. The general deſired to know how he had prayed amongſt them; he anſwered, that it was his cuſtom in his prayers, to ſend the

the king, the miniſters of ſtate, the officers of the army, with all their ſoldiers, and the epiſcopal clergy, all broad-ſide to hell; but particularly the general himſelf. What, ſaid the general, did you ſend me to hell, Sir? Yea, replied the dragoon, you at the head of them as their leader.

And here I do ſolemnly aver upon my veracity and knowledge, that biſhop Burnet, in the Hiſtory of his own Times, hath, in a moſt falſe and ſcandalous manner, miſrepreſented the action at Bothwell-Bridge, and the behaviour of the epiſcopal clergy in Scotland: For, as to the former, I was preſent in that engagement, which was performed in the manner I have related; and as to the latter, having travelled through moſt parts of that kingdom, particular the north and weſt; I was well acquainted with them, and will take it to my death, that the reverſe of this character, which Burnet gives of both, is the truth. And becauſe that author is ſo unjuſt to the epiſcopal clergy, and ſo partial to the covenanters, and their teachers, I do affirm, that I have known ſeveral among the latter ſort guilty of thoſe very vices, wherewith this biſhop brands the epiſcopal clergy. Among many others, I will produce one inſtance, rather to divert the reader, than from any obloquy. One of thoſe eight fanatick teachers, who were permitted, at the reſtoration, to keep their livings, came to Sir John Carmichael's houſe, within a mile of Lanerick, where I was then upon a viſit to Sir John. We drank hard till it was late, and all the company retired, except Sir John and myſelf. The teacher would needs give us prayers, but fell aſleep before he had half done; whereupon Sir John and I, ſetting a bottle and glaſs at his noſe, left him upon his knees. The poor man ſneaked off early the next morning, being, in all appearance, aſhamed of his hypocriſy.

To return from this digreſſion. The general ſent out ſeveral parties, and me with a party among the reſt; where, during the winter, and the following ſpring, I ſecured many of thoſe, whoſe names and abodes, the canting dragoon had given a liſt of.

In

In July following, the general, by order of council, commanded me to go with a detachment of thirty horſe, and fifty dragoons in purſuit of about one hundred and fifty rebels, who had eſcaped at Bothwell-Bridge, and ever ſince kept together in a body, up and down in Galloway. I followed them for five or ſix days, from one place to another; after which, on the 22d of July, they ſtayed for me at Airs-Moſs, ſituate in the ſhire of Air, near the town of Cumlock. The Moſs is four miles long from eaſt to weſt, and two broad. The rebels drew up at the eaſt end, and conſiſted of thirty horſe and one hundred and twenty foot. I faced them upon a riſing ground with my thirty horſe and fifty dragoons. The reaſon why the rebels choſe this place to fight on, rather than a plain field, was for fear their horſe might deſert the foot, as they did on Hamilton-Moor, near Bothwell-Bridge: And likewiſe, that in caſe they loſt the day, they might ſave themſelves by retreating into the Moſs.

I placed myſelf on the left, as judging, that the beſt officer the rebels had would command on the right. The action began about five in the afternoon, but laſted not long; for, I ordered my men firſt to receive the enemy's fire, then to ride down the hill upon them, and uſe their broad-ſwords: They did ſo, and before the enemy had time to draw theirs, cut many of them down in an inſtant; whereupon they wheeled about, and captain Fowler, who commanded the rebels on the right, being then in the rear, advancing up to me, I gave him ſuch a blow over the head with my broad-ſword, as would have cleaved his ſkull, had it not been defended by a ſteel-cap. Fowler turning about, aimed a blow at me, but I warded it off, and with a back ſtroke, cut the upper part of his head clean off, from the noſe upwards.

By this time, the rebels leaving their horſes, fled to the Moſs; but the royaliſts purſuing them, killed about ſixty, and took fourteen priſoners. Here Cameron, the famous covenanter, loſt his life; and Haxton was taken priſoner, infamous for embruing his hands in the blood of the archbiſhop of St. Andrews, as I have already ready mentioned; for which parricide, both his hands were afterwards cut off, and he was hanged at Edinburgh.

But this victory coſt me very dear; for being then in the rear, I rode into the Moſs after the rebels, where I overtook a dozen of them hacking and hewing one of my men, whoſe horſe was bogged; his name was Elliot, a ſtout ſoldier; and one of Clavers's troop. He had received ſeveral wounds, and was at the point of being killed, when I came to his relief. I ſhot one of the rogues dead with my carbine, which obliged the reſt to let the poor man and his horſe creep out of the hole; but at the ſame time drew all their fury upon myſelf; for Elliot made a ſhift to crawl out of the Moſs, leading his horſe in his hand, but was wholely diſabled from aſſiſting his deliverer, and was not regarded by his enemies, who probably thought he was mortally wounded, or indeed rather that they had no time to mind him; for I laid about me ſo faſt, that they judged it beſt to keep off, and not to venture within my reach; till it unfortunately happened, that my horſe ſlipped in the ſame hole, out of which Elliot, and his had juſt got. When they had me at this advantage, they began to ſhew their courage, and manfully dealt their blows with their broad-ſwords, from ſome of which, the carbine that hung down my back, defended me a little. As I was paddling in the hole, the horſe not able to get out, one of the rebels ran me through the ſmall of the back with his broad-ſword, and at the ſame inſtant, two more wounded me under the ribs with their ſmall ones. Then I threw myſelf over the head of my horſe, taking the far piſtol out of the holſter in my left hand, and holding my broad-ſword in my right; and as one of the villains was coming haſtily up to me, his foot ſlipped, and before he could recover himſelf, I ſtruck my ſword into his ſkull; but the fellow being big and heavy, ſnapped it aſunder as he fell, within a ſpan of the hilt. The rebels had me now at a great advantage: One of them made a ſtroke at me, which I warded off with the hilt of the ſword that was left in my hand; but the force with which he ſtruck the blow, blow, and I kept it off, brought us both to the ground. However, I got up before him, clapped my piſtol to his ſide, and ſhot him dead. As ſoon as this was done, another came behind me, and with ſome weapon or other, ſtruck me ſuch a blow on the head, as laid me flat on my back; in which poſture I remained a good while inſenſible; the rogues taking it for granted that I was dead, ſcoured off, fearing that by this time, ſome of my men were returning back from the purſuit.

After ſome time, I a little recovered my ſenſes, and ſtrove to lift myſelf up, which one of the rogues happening to ſee at ſome diſtance, immediately returned, and ſaid in my hearing, God, the dog is no deed yet: Then coming up to me, took his ſword, and putting its hilt to his breaſt, and guiding it with both his hands, made a thruſt at my belly; but my ſenſes were now ſo far recovered, that I parryed the thruſt with a piece of the ſword which remained ſtill in my hand. The fellow, when he miſſed his aim, almoſt fell on his face; for the ſword ran up to the hilt hilt in the moſs; and as he was recovering himſelf, I gave him a dab in the mouth with my broken ſword, which very much hurt him; but he aiming a ſecond thruſt, which I had likewiſe the good fortune to put by, and having as before given him another dab in the mouth, he immediately went off, for fear of the purſuers, whereof many were now returning.

In this diſtreſs, I made a ſhift with much difficulty and pain, to get upon my feet, but my right leg being diſabled by the wound I received from the broad-ſword, I was forced to limp by the help of the carbine, which I made uſe of as a ſtaff. I had loſt my horſe; for one of the rogues, when I had quitted him in the hole, led him away through the moſs. I recovered him about a year after from the man to whom the rebel had ſold him; and the ſaid rebel when he was at the gallows, confeſſed himſelf to be the ſame man, who took away the horſe at Airs-Moſs.

There was a Lancaſhire gentleman, one Mr. Parker, who came volunteer to Airs-Moſs, Moſs, with intent, as he expreſſed himſelf, to ſee the ſport. This gentleman, riding on my right hand, at the time when we received the enemy's fire, in the beginning of the action, was ſhot with a blunderbuſs under the left ſhoulder; the wound was ſo large, that a man might thruſt his fiſt into it: Yet when I deſired him to fall back, and take care of his wound, he anſwered me, that he would firſt have his penny-worth out of the rogues; and accordingly followed us on horſeback into the moſs, as far as the horſe could go without bogging. But, by that time, his wound ſo grievouſly pained him, with ſome other cuts he got in the purſuit, that he was forced to alight and ſit on a dry ſpot of ground, which he found in the moſs, from whence he ſaw all that happened to me, without being able to come to my aſſiſtance, any more than Elliot; who having gotten to a riſing ground, ſaw likewiſe all that had paſſed. However Mr. Parker, as I came limping towards him, could not forbear laughing, and ſaid what a plague, have you got your bones well paid too? Then both of us made made a ſhift to get up to Elliot on the riſing ground.

The trumpeter being by this time returned, with ſome others from the purſuit, was ordered to ſound a call, which brought all the reſt back, with the fourteen priſoners and Haxton among the reſt, who was that day commander in chief among the rebels. Of the king's party, but two were killed, Mr. Andrew Kerr, a gentleman of Clavers's own troop, and one Mc. Kabe, a dragoon in captain Stuart's troop, where I was lieutenant. The wounded were about eight or nine, beſides Parker and Elliot. Elliot died the next day: He, Kerr, and Mc. Kabe, were honourably buried by Mr. Brown, a gentleman who lived hard by, to whoſe houſe their bodies were carried after the fight at the Moſs. An Engliſh lady, living about eight miles off, took care of Mr. Parker, but he died at her houſe a year after, of his wounds, very much lamented on account of his loyalty and valour.

When the fight was over, night coming on, I ordered all my men, except twelve twelve dragoons, whom I kept to attend myſelf, to march with the priſoners, and thoſe who were wounded to Douglaſs, fourteen miles off, and to carry along with them Cameron's head. In the mean time, I and my party of dragoons went, that night, ſixteen long miles to Lanerick, where the general and all the foot quartered; as well to acquaint him with what had been done, as to have my own wounds taken care of. I ſent one of my dragoons before me with my meſſage: Whereupon the general himſelf, although it were after mid-night, accompanied with the earls of Linlithgow, Mar, Roſs, Hume, and the lord Dalhouſie, came out to meet me at the gate: Dalhouſie forced me to lodge in his own chamber, to which I was accordingly carried by two of my dragoons. After my wounds had been dreſſed in the preſence of this noble company, who ſtood round about me, being very thirſty through the loſs of blood, I drank the king's health, and the company's, in a large glaſs of wine and water; and then was laid in Dalhouſie's own bed.

Next

Next day the general leaving Lanerick, with the forces under his command, ordered a troop of horſe and another of dragoons to attend me, till I ſhould be able to travel up to Edinburgh, for the better conveniency of phyſicians and ſurgeons. My wounds did not confine me to my bed; and in a month's time I went to Edinburgh on horſeback by eaſy ſtages, where I continued till Candlemas following, lingering of the wound I had received by the broad-ſword. My ſurgeon was the ſon of the ſame Dr. Irvin, who firſt got me into the guards; but having unfortunately neglected to tye a ſtring to the tent of green cloth, which he uſed for the wound; the tent ſlipped into my body, where it lay under my navel ſeven months and five days, and exceedingly pained me, not ſuffering me to ſleep, otherwiſe than by taking ſoporiferous pills. When the tent was firſt miſſing, neither the ſurgeon, nor any body elſe ever imagined that it was lodged in my body; but ſuppoſed it to have ſlipped out of the wound while I ſlept, and carried away by ſome rat, or other vermin: The tent lying lying thus in my body, made it impoſſible that the wound could heal: Wherefore, after lingering ſeven months, by the advice of a gentlewoman in the neighbourhood, I got leave to go for Ireland, with my ſurgeon, and there try whether my native air would contribute any thing to my cure.

However inſignificant this relation may be to the generality of readers; yet I cannot omit a lucky accident to which I owe my cure. While I continued at Edinburgh, I ordered ſome pipes of lead to be made in a mold, through which the thin corruption, which continually iſſued out of the wound, cauſed by the tent remaining in my body, might be conveyed as through a foſſet. Theſe pipes I cut ſhorter by degrees, in proportion as I imagined the wound was healing at the bottom; till at laſt, by miſtaking the true cauſe, the tent continuing ſtill where it did, the pipes became too ſhort for the uſe intended; wherefore when I was in Ireland, I made a coarſe pipe myſelf, which was long enough: This pipe, after the wound was waſhed with brandy, always remained in my body till the next dreſſing; but being made without art, and ſomewhat jagged at the end, it happened one morning, when the pipe was drawn out as uſual, in order to have the wound waſhed, the tent followed, to the great ſurprize of my father, who, at that time, was going to dreſs the wound; my ſurgeon being then at Caſtle-Irvin, where I had left him with his brother Dr. Irvin, at Sir Gerard Irvin's houſe; the ſame gentleman who was delivered out of Derry-goal by my father, as I have related in the beginning of theſe memoirs.

The night before the tent was drawn out of my body, having not ſlept a wink, I thought myſelf in the morning ſomewhat feveriſh, and therefore deſired my father to ſend for Dr. Lindſey, to let me blood. In the mean time, ſlumbering a little, I dreamed that the covenanters were coming to cut my throat; under this apprehenſion I awaked, and found my neighbour, captain Saunderſon in my chamber, who was come to viſit me. I then called for my father to dreſs my wound; when the tent followed the pipe, as I have already ſaid, to my great joy, for then I knew I ſhould ſoon be well. I therefore ordered my horſe to be got ready, and rode out with captain Saunderſon and my father, to meet Dr. Lindſey, who hearing the joyful news, carried us to a gentleman's houſe, where we drank very heartily: Then I returned home and ſlept almoſt four-and-twenty hours. Two days after, Dr. Irvin and his brother, the ſurgeon, came to my father's houſe, where the Dr. being informed in the circumſtances of my cure, ſeveral chid his brother for his neglect, ſwearing he had a mind to ſhoot him, and that, if I had died, my blood would have been charged on his head. He then ordered me a remedy, which would heal up the wound in twenty days. This fell out in the beginning of May, at which time taking leave of my father and other friends in Ireland, I returned to Edinburgh, where, before the end of that month, my wound was perfectly healed up; but I was never afterwards ſo able to bear fatigues as I had hitherto been.

The duke of York was arrived at Edinburgh the Michaelmas before, where the general, from the time he left Lanerick in July, continued with the guards; the reſt of the forces quartered up and down in other places. The general, after my arrival, coming every day to ſee me, in his way, as he went to the duke's court, did me the honour to mention me and my ſervices to his royal highneſs, who was deſirous to ſee me; I was admitted to kiſs his hand, and ordered to ſit down, in regard to my honourable wounds, which would not ſuffer me to ſtand, without great pain. I cannot conceal this mark of favour and diſtinction, ſhewn me by a great prince, although I am very ſenſible it will be imputed to vanity. I muſt remember likewiſe, that upon my return to Edinburgh, happening to overtake the general in the ſtreet, and gently touching him, his excellency turning in a great ſurprize, cried out, O God, Man, are you living? I anſwered that I was, and hoped to do the king and his excellency further ſervice.

After

After I had continued a month with my friends in Edinburgh, who all congratulated with me upon my recovery, I repaired to the troop at Lanerick, where I often ranged with a party through the the Weſt, to find out the ſtragling remains of the covenanting rebels, but for ſome time without ſucceſs, till a week before Chriſtmas, after the duke of York ſucceeded to the crown, and a year and half after I was cured. Having drank hard one night, I dreamed that I had found captain David Steele, a notorious rebel, in one of the five farmers houſes on a mountain in the ſhire of Clideſdale, and pariſh of Liſmahego within eight miles of Hamilton, a place that I was well acquainted with. This man was head of the rebels, ſince the affair of Airs-Moſs, having ſucceeded to Haxton, who had been there taken, and afterwards hanged, as the reader has already heard: For, as to Robert Hamilton, who was their commander in chief at Bothwell-Bridge, he appeared no more among them, but fled, as it was believed, to Holland.

Steele, and his father before him, held a farm in the eſtate of Hamilton, within two or three miles of that town. When he betook himſelf to arms, the farm lay waſte, and the duke could find no other perſon, who would venture to take it; whereupon his grace ſent ſeveral meſſengers to Steele, to know the reaſon why he kept the farm waſte. The duke received no other anſwer, than that he would keep it waſte, in ſpight of him and the king too; whereupon his grace, at whoſe table I had always the honour to be a welcome gueſt, deſired I would uſe my endeavours to deſtroy that rogue, and I would oblige him for ever.

I muſt here take leave to inform the reader, that the duke of Hamilton's friendſhip for me, was founded upon the many ſervices he knew I had done the publick, as well as upon the relation I bore to Sir Gerard Irvin, the perſon, whom, of all the world, his grace moſt loved and eſteemed, ever ſince the time they had ſerved in arms together for the King, in the Highlands, with my lord Glankern and Sir Arthur Forbes, (father to the preſent ſent earl of Granard) after the king's defeat at Worceſter, during the time of the uſurpation.

To return therefore to my ſtory; when I awaked out of my dream, as I had done before in the affair of Wilſon, (and I deſire the ſame apology I made in the introduction to theſe memoirs, may ſerve for both) I preſently roſe, and ordered thirty-ſix dragoons to be at the place appointed by break of day. When we arrived thither, I ſent a party to each of the five farmers houſes. This villain Steele had murdered above forty of the king's ſubjects in cold blood; and, as I was informed, had often laid ſnares to entrap me; but it happened, that although he uſually kept a gang to attend him, yet at this time he had none, when he ſtood in the greateſt need. One of my party found him in one of the farmer's houſes, juſt as I happened to dream. The dragoons, firſt, ſearched all the rooms below without ſucceſs, till two of them hearing ſomebody ſtirring over their heads, went up a pair of turnpike ſtairs. Steele had put on his cloaths, while the ſearch was making below: The chamber where he lay was called the chamber of Deeſe, which is the name given to a room, where the laird lies when he comes to a tenant's houſe. Steele, ſuddenly opening the door, fired a blunderbuſs down at the two dragoons, as they were coming up the ſtairs; but the bullets, grazing againſt the ſide of the turnpike, only wounded and did not kill them. Then Steele violently threw himſelf down the ſtairs among them, and made towards the door to ſave his life, but loſt it upon the ſpot; for the dragoons who guarded the houſe, diſpatched him with their broad-ſwords. I was not with the party when he was killed, being at that time employed in ſearching at one of the other four houſes, but I ſoon found what had happened, by hearing the noiſe of the ſhot made with the blunderbuſs: From hence I returned ſtrait to Lanerick, and immediately ſent one of the dragoons expreſs to general Drummond at Edinburgh.

General Dalziel died about Michaelmas this year, and was ſucceeded by lieutenant general general Drummond, who was likewiſe my very good friend.

But I cannot here let paſs the death of ſo brave and loyal a commander, as general Dalziel, without giving the reader ſome account of him, as far as my knowledge, or enquiry, can reach.

Thomas Dalziel, among many other officers, was taken priſoner at the unfortunate defeat at Worceſter, and ſent to the tower; from whence, I know not by what means, he made his eſcape, and went to Muſcovy; where the Czar, then reigning, made him his general: But ſome time after the reſtoration of the royal family, he gave up his commiſſion, and repairing to king Charles the Second, was, in conſideration of his eminent ſervices, conſtituted commander in chief of his majeſty's forces in Scotland; in which poſt he continued till his death, excepting only one fortnight, when he was ſuperſeded by the duke of Monmouth, ſome days before the action at Bothwell-Bridge, as I have already related. He was bred up very hardy from his youth, both in dyet and cloathing. He never wore boots, nor above one coat, which was cloſe to his body, with cloſe ſleeves, like thoſe we call jockey-coats. He never wore a peruke; nor did he ſhave his beard ſince the murder of king Charles the Firſt. In my time, his head was bald, which he covered only with a beaver-hat, the brim of which was not above three inches broad. His beard was white and buſhy, and yet reached down almoſt to his girdle. He uſually went to London once or twice in a year, and then only to kiſs the king's hand, who had a great eſteem for his worth and valour. His unuſual dreſs and figure, when he was in London, never failed to draw after him a great crowd of boys, and other young people, who conſtantly attended at his lodgings, and followed him with Huzzas, as he went to court, or returned from it. As he was a man of humour, he would always thank them for their civilities, when he left them at the door, to go into the king; and would let them know exactly, at what hour he intended to come out again, and return to his lodgings. When the king walked in the park, attended by ſome of his courtiers, and Dalziel in his company, the ſame crowds would always be after him, ſhewing their admiration at his beard and dreſs, ſo that the king could hardly paſs on for the crowd; upon which his majeſty bid the devil take Dalziel, for bringing ſuch a rabble of boys together, to have their guts ſqueezed out, whilſt they gaped at his long beard and antick habit; requeſting him, at the ſame time, (as Dalziel uſed to expreſs it) to ſhave and dreſs like other Chriſtians, to keep the poor bairns out of danger. All this could never prevail on him to part with his beard, but yet, in compliance to his majeſty, he went once to court in the very height of the faſhion; but as ſoon as the king and thoſe about him had laughed ſufficiently, at the ſtrange figure he made, he re-aſſumed his uſual habit, to the great joy of the boys, who had not diſcovered him in his faſhionable dreſs.

When the duke of York ſucceeded to the crown, general Dalziel was reſolved ſtill to retain his loyalty, although, at the ſame time, he often told his friends, that all things were going wrong at court; but but death came very ſeaſonably, to reſcue him from the difficulties he was likely to be under, between the notions he had of duty to his prince on one ſide, and true zeal for his religion on the other.

I muſt now reſume a little my diſcourſe upon captain Steele. Some time before the action, in which he was killed, general Drummond, who was then newly made commander in chief ſent for me in haſte, to attend him in Edinburgh: My way lay through a very ſtrong paſs, hard by Airs-Moſs, and within a mile of Cumlock: As I was going through Cumlock, a friend there told me, that Steele, with a party, waited for me at the paſs. I had with me only one dragoon and a drummer: I ordered the latter to gallop on ſtrait to the paſs, and when he got thither, to beat a dragoon-march, while I with the dragoon ſhould ride along the by-path, on the edge of the Moſs. When Steele and his men heard the drum, they ſcoured croſs the by-path into the Moſs, apprehending that a ſtrong party was coming in ſearch of them: But either I, or the dragoon, (I forgot which) ſhot one of

of the rebels dead, as he croſſed us to get into the Moſs. To put an end to this buſineſs of Steele. When the dragoon, whom I ſent expreſs, had delivered his meſſage to general Drummond, he was juſt ſetting out for his country-houſe at Dumblain, but returned to his lodgings, and wrote me a letter, that he would ſend for me up after the holydays, and recommend me to the government, to reward me for my ſervices. He faithfully kept his word, but I received nothing more than promiſes.

Steele was buried in the church-yard of Liſmahego, by ſome of his friends; who, after the revolution, erected a fair monument, on pillars, over his grave, and cauſed an epitaph to be engraved on the ſtone, in words to this effect.

Here lieth the body of captain David Steele, a ſaint, who was murdered by John Creichton [with the date underneath.]

Some of my friends burleſqued this epitaph, in the following manner:

Here lies the Body of Saint Steele.
Murdered by John Creichton, that Dee'l.

Duke

Duke Hamilton, in queen Ann's time, informed me of this honour done to that infamous rebel; and when I had ſaid to his grace, that I wiſhed he had ordered his foot-men to demoliſh the monument, the duke anſwered, he would not have done ſo for five hundred pounds, becauſe it would be an honour to me as long as it laſted.

The laſt ſummer, about the end of May, if I remember right, (and I deſire to be excuſed for not always relating things in the order when they happened) the marquis of Argyle after having eſcaped out of the caſtle of Edinburgh, into Holland, returned to invade Scotland, to ſupport the duke of Monmouth's pretenſions to the crown, as was generally believed. He landed in his own country, in the Highlands, with a party of Dutch, and ſome Scottiſh gentlemen, who had fled for treaſon; among whom Sir John Cogheran was of the greateſt note: Whereupon the government ordered the marquis of Atholl, and Mr. Owen Cameron, laird of Logheel, to raiſe their clans, and march with their party againſt Argyle.

gyle. They did ſo, and, in the evening, pitched their camp cloſe by him. Here, in the night, Cameron, patroling with a party, met another of his own men, and taking them for enemies, becauſe they had loſt the word in their cups, killed eight or nine; among whom two or three happened to be perſons of note; the friends of thoſe who were killed, reſolving, if poſſible, to have him hanged; he was obliged to ride poſt to the king. He went to his majeſty in the dreſs in which he had travelled; and the king, being already informed how the accident happened, inſtead of ſuffering him to tell his ſtory, commanded him to draw his broad-ſword, intending to knight him therewith: But Cameron could not draw it, becauſe the ſcabbard had got wet on the way. The king, obſerving the confuſion he was in, ſaid, he knew the reaſon that kept the ſword in the ſheath; adding that he never failed to draw it, in the ſervice of his father, his brother, and himſelf; whereupon he was knighted with another ſword, with the title of Sir Owen Cameron. He returned to Edinburgh, and from thence went went as a volunteer, to ſerve in the ſtanding army, which was then moving towards the coaſt of Galloway, to prevent Argyle from landing. For, upon the oppoſition he found from the marquis of Atholl, and his men, with their aſſiſtance in the Highlands, he ſhipped his forces, and ſailed round to the Weſt, hoping to land there. But the army moving along the coaſt, always in ſight of him, compelled him to return the way he came, until he landed in his own country again. From thence, after gathering what ſupplies of men he could, he marched, and encamped, in the evening, within two or three miles of Glaſgow. But the king's army, having ſent out ſcouts, to diſcover what way he took, encamped over againſt him, the ſame evening, on an eminence; there being a bog between both armies.

The king's forces, conſiſted of the earl of Linlithgow's regiment of foot-guards, the earl of Mar's of Foot, Claver's of Horſe, Dunmore's of Dragoons, Bochan's of Foot, and Levingſton's of Horſe-Guards, with ſome gentlemen of quality, volunteers; among among whom the earl of Dunbarton was of the greateſt note.

Here the two armies lay in ſight of each other; but, before morning, Argyle was gone, his Highlanders having deſerted him; and then the king's army went to refreſh themſelves at Glaſgow, waiting till it could be known, which way Argyle had fled. It was ſoon underſtood that he had croſſed the Clyde at Kilpatrick; and that Sir John Cogheran lay with a party, in a Stone-Dike-Park, about ten miles off. The lord Roſs was therefore diſpatched, with a party of horſe, and captain Cleland, who was now my captain, (my friend Stuart being dead) with another of dragoons, to find them out: When they came up to the park, where Sir John Cogheran lay with his Dutch; they fired at one another, and ſome of the king's ſoldiers fell, among whom captain Cleland was one; whereupon the troop was given to Sir Adam Blare (who was likewiſe wounded in that raſh engagement) although, upon duke Hamilton's application to the king, I had been promiſed to ſucceed Cleland. But Sir Adam,

Adam, and ſecretary Melford, being brothers-in-law, that intereſt prevailed.

I muſt deſire the reader's pardon, for ſo frequently interſperſing my own private affairs, with thoſe of the publick; but what I chiefly propoſed, was to write my own memoirs, and not a Hiſtory of the Times, further than I was concerned in them.

Night coming on, the king's party withdrew, leaving Sir John Cogheran in the park, who, notwithſtanding this little ſucceſs, deſired his followers to ſhift for themſelves, and left them before morning. Argyle next evening was found alone, a mile above Greenknock, at the water-ſide, endeavouring to get into a little boat, and grapling with the owner thereof, (a poor weaver.) It ſeems he wanted preſence of mind, to engage the man with a piece of money, to ſet him on the other ſide. In the mean time, Sir John Shaw, riding with ſome gentlemen to Greenknock, and ſeeing the ſtruggle, ſeized the earl, and carried him to Glaſgow, from whence he was ſent with a ſtrong guard guard to Edinburgh, and ſome time after beheaded.

The next day, the army marched towards the borders, againſt the duke of Monmouth, but, an expreſs arriving of his defeat, the troops were commanded to repair to their ſeveral quarters.

I ſhall here occaſionally relate an unfortunate accident, which happened this ſummer in Scotland.

Mc. Donnel, laird of Cappagh in the Highlands, within eight miles of Inverloghy, was unjuſtly poſſeſſed, as moſt men believed, for many years, of an eſtate, which in right belonged to the laird of Mackintoſh. Both theſe gentlemen were well affected to the king. The laird of Cappagh, after ſowing-time was over, had gone that ſummer, as it was his cuſtom, to make merry with his Clans, on the mountains, till the time of harveſt ſhould call him home. But in his abſence, Mackintoſh, and his Clans, aſſiſted with a party of the army, by order from the government, poſſeſſed himſelf of Cappagh's eſtate; whereupon Mc. Donnel, and his Clans, returning from the mountains, ſet upon the enemy, killed ſeveral gentlemen among them, and took Mackintoſh himſelf priſoner. Mc. Donnel had given ſtrict orders to his men, not to kill any of the army. But captain Mc. Kenzy, who commanded on the other ſide, making a ſhot at one of Mc. Donnel's men, who was purſuing his adverſary, the man, diſcharging his piſtol at the captain, ſhot him in the knee, who, after having been carried fifty miles, to Inverneſs, to a ſurgeon, died of his wound.

Soon after the government ordered me to detach ſixty dragoons, with a lieutenant, cornet, and ſtandard, and to march with captain Streighton, and two hundred of the foot-guards, againſt the Mc. Donnels; to deſtroy man, woman, and child, pertaining to the laird of Cappagh, and to burn his houſes and corn. Upon the approach of our party, Mc. Donnel, laird of Cappagh, diſmiſſing his priſoners, retired farther into the mountains; whereupon, we who were ſent againſt him continued to deſtroy all the houſes and corn, from the time of Lammaſs to the tenth of September: And then we advanced vanced towards the borders, to join the Scotch army, which at that time was marching towards England, againſt the prince of Orange, who then intended an invaſion. We arrived there the firſt of October, after a march of two hundred miles.

General Drummond being then dead, James Douglaſs, brother to the duke of Queenſberry, ſucceeded him as commander in chief: And Graham laird of Clavers (about this time created lord Dundee) was major-general. On the firſt of October, the army paſſed the Tweed, and drew up on the banks, on the Engliſh ſide, where the general gave a ſtrict charge to the officers, that they ſhould keep their men, from offering the leaſt injury in their march; adding, that if he heard any of the Engliſh complain, the officers ſhould anſwer for the faults of their men; and ſo they arrived at Carliſle that night.

Next day, general Douglaſs, by order from the king, marched the foot, by Cheſter, towards London; and Dundee the horſe, by York; to which city he arrived in four or five days. The army did not reach London till about the five and twentieth of October, being ordered, by the contrivance of Douglaſs, the general, to march ſlow, on purpoſe that the prince of Orange might land, before the king's forces ſhould grow ſtrong enough to oppoſe him.

The Scotch army, at this time, conſiſted of four regiments of foot, one of horſe one of dragoons, one troop of horſe guards; and it was computed, that the earl of Feverſham, who was then general of all the king's forces, had under his command, of Engliſh, Scotch, and Irish an army of near thirty thouſand men. Soon after the prince's landing, the king went to Saliſbury, with a guard of five hundred horſe, commanded by the earl of Airly, two days before the reſt of the army came up to him. The earl of Airly, when he was lord Ogilvy, attended the great marquis of Montrose in all his actions, for king Charles the Firſt and Second. But, at this time, being old, it was reported that he was dead, before the Scotch forces went into England, to oppoſe the prince of Orange; whereupon the the king believing the report, had given his troop in Dundee's regiment to the earl of Anandale: But the earl having overtook the army at Cambridge, in their march, went on to London, and there preſenting himſelf before the king; his majeſty was ſo juſt and gracious, that he immediately reſtored his lordſhip to the troop, ordering him at the ſame time, to command thoſe two hundred men, who attended him down to Saliſbury.

When all the forces were arrived at Saliſbury, the earl of Dunmore with his regiment of dragoons (wherein I ſerved) was ordered to a paſs three miles below the city, where I commanded the guard that night.

The ſame morning that the army arrived, the great men about the king, as the lord Churchill, &c. to the number of thirty, adviſed his majeſty to take the air on horſeback, intending, as the earl of Dunmore was informed, to give up their maſter to the prince: But the king, probably ſuſpecting the deſign, returned in haſte to the city. Next night, at a council of war, called to conſult what was fitteſt to be done in the preſent juncture of affairs, the very ſame great men ſwore to ſtand by his majeſty with their lives and fortunes; and as ſoon as he was gone to reſt, mounting on horſeback, they all went over to the prince, except the earl of Feverſham, Dunbarton, and a very few more: For the earl of Dunbarton going to his majeſty, for orders, at four of the clock in the morning, found they were all departed.

Thoſe few who ſtayed with the king, adviſed his majeſty to return immediately to London; and the lord Dundee was ordered to bring up the Scotch horſe and dragoons, with the duke of Berwick's regiment of horſe, to Reading, where he joined Dunbarton with his forces, and continued there nine or ten days. They were, in all, about ten thouſand ſtrong. General Douglaſs, with his regiment of foot-guards, paſſing by Reading, lay at Maidenhead; from whence, one of his battalions revolted to the prince, under the conduct only of a corporal, whoſe name was Kemp. However, Douglaſs aſſured the king, that this defection happened pened againſt his will; and yet when the officers were ready to fire upon the deſerters, his compaſſion was ſuch, that he would not permit them.

After this, the earl of Dunbarton, and the lord Dundee, with all the officers, who adhered to the king, were ordered to meet his majeſty at Uxbridge, where he deſigned to fight the prince: The earl of Feverſham got thither before the king and the army arrived. When the forces drew together, every party ſent an officer to the earl of Feverſham, to receive his commands. I attended his lordſhip from my lord Dundee, and was ordered, with the reſt, to wait till the king came to dinner, his majeſty being expected within half an hour; but it fell out otherwiſe: For the earl, to his great ſurprize, received a letter from the king, ſignifying, that his majeſty was gone off, and had no further ſervice for the army. When I carried this news to my lord Dundee, neither his lordſhip, nor the lords Linlithgow and Dunmore, could forbear falling into tears: After which, being at a loſs what courſe to take, I ſaid to my lord Dundee, that as he had brought us out of Scotland, he ſhould convey us thither back again in a body; adding, that the forces might lye that night at Watford, ſix miles off: My advice was followed, and I went before to get billets, where to quarter the men. My lord Dundee ordered all to be ready at ſound of trumpet, and to unbridle their horſes no longer, than while they were eating their oats. The townſmen contrived to give out a report, before day, that the prince of Orange was approaching, hoping to afright us away with a falſe alarm: Whereupon we marched out, but at the ſame time drew up in a ſtrong encloſure, at the town's end: reſolving to fight the prince, if he ſhould advance towards us. My lord Dundee diſpatched me immediately, to diſcover whether the report of the prince's approach were true; but I only met a meſſenger with a letter from his highneſs, to my lord Dundee, which I received and delivered to his lordſhip. The contents of it, as far as I am able to recollect, were as follow:

" My lord DUNDEE,

" I underſtand you are now at Wat-
" ford, and that you keep your men to" gether; I deſire you may ſtay there
" till farther orders, and, upon my honour,
" none in my army ſhall touch you."

W. H. Prince of ORANGE.

Upon the receipt of this letter, our forces returncd into the town, ſet up their horſes, and refreſhed themſelves. About three in the afternoon, there came intelligence, that the king would be at Whitehall that night, having returned from Feverſham, whither he had fled in diſguiſe, and was ill-treated by the rabble before they diſcovered him. Upon this incident, the lords Dundee, Dunmore, Linlithgow, and myſelf, who deſired leave to go with my colonel, took horſe; and, arriving at Whitehall a little after the king, had the honour to kiſs his majeſty's hand.

The next morning, the earl of Feverſham was ſent by the king, with ſome propoſals to the prince of Orange, who was then at Windſor, where his lordſhip was put in arreſt by the prince's command, who ſent the marquis of Halifax, the earl of Shrewſbury, and the lord Delamair (if I rightly remember) to the king, with his highneſs's order, that his majeſty ſhould remove from Whitehall, next day, before twelve o'clock. This order was given about one in the morning: At the ſame time, a barge was brought to Whitehall-ſtairs, and a Dutch guard ſet about the king, without his knowledge, but with directions to ſee him ſafe, if he had a mind to go on board any ſhip, in order to his eſcape. A ſhip, it ſeems, was likewiſe prepared, and his majeſty, attended by the lords Dunmore, Arran and Middleton, went on board; and then the three lords returned to London. The prince arrived at St. James's about two hours after his majeſty's departure; and the earl of Arran went, among the reſt, to attend his highneſs; to whom being introduced, he told the prince, that the king, his maſter, had commanded him, upon his departure, to wait upon his highneſs, and receive his commands. The prince replied plied he was glad to ſee him, and had an eſteem for him and all men of honour. Then turning aſide to ſome other perſons, who were making their court; Dr. Burnet, ſoon after made biſhop of Saliſbury, who had been the earl of Arran's governor, coming up to his lordſhip, cried, Ay, my lord Arran, you are now come in, and think to make a merit when the work is done. To this inſult the earl, in the hearing of many, replied only, Come, Doctor, we ken one another weel enough. And the earl's own father told the prince, that if this young fellow were not ſecured, he would, perhaps, give his highneſs ſome trouble. Whereupon this noble young lord was ſent to the tower, where he continued about a year, and then returned to Scotland: And ſoon after, the young lord Forbes, now earl of Granard, was likewiſe impriſoned in the ſame place. King William had made ſeveral advances to his lordſhip, as he did to many other perſons of quality, to engage him in his ſervice; and ſending for him one day, aſked him why he did not take care of his regiment? My lord Forbes, not being provided provided on a ſudden with a better anſwer, told the king, that having been born in Ireland, he had not credit enough, he believed, to raiſe men to fill up the places of the papiſts in his regiment. King William thereupon ſaid, he would take that charge upon himſelf. Lord Forbes, having now recollected himſelf, ſaid, he had likewiſe another reaſon why he found it neceſſary to decline his ſervice, but was unwilling to mention it, not having the leaſt intention to diſoblige his highneſs. The prince deſired that he might do it freely, and it ſhould not diſoblige him; whereupon my lord ſaid, that having ſworn to retain his loyalty to king James, he could not, in honour and conſcience, without his maſter's permiſſion, enter into the ſervice of another prince, during his majeſty's life. Whereupon king William, ſoon after, thought it proper to ſend him to the tower; but, however, was ſo generous, as, in the time of his confinement, to ſend one of the clerks of the treaſury, with an order to pay him two hundred pounds, as very reaſonably thinking, that, under the loſs of his regiment, as well as of his rents in Ireland, he might want money to ſupport himſelf. My lord Forbes having aſked the clerk, by whoſe direction he brought that ſum? And the other anſwering, that he was only ordered to pay the money to his lordſhip, and to take his receipt, conjectured this preſent to have proceeded from king William; and therefore deſired the clerk to preſent his moſt humble reſpects and thanks to his highneſs, and to let him know, that, as he had never done him any ſervice, he could not, in honour, receive any marks of his bounty.

Upon this ſubject I muſt add one more particular, that when my lord Forbes arrived with his regiment out of Ireland, and attended on king James, he adviſed his majeſty to fight the prince upon the firſt opportunity after his landing, before his party ſhould grow ſtrong: But thoſe about the king, who had already engaged in the other intereſt, would not ſuffer that advice to be followed.

I now return to my lord Dundee, and my lord Dunmore. Their lordſhips acted no longer as colonels, when they underſtood ſtood that the prince intended to place himſelf on the throne during his majeſty's life: But the firſt, with the twenty-four troopers, who followed him up from Watford, left London, and repaired, with the utmoſt expedition, to his own caſtle; and the ſecond, ſome time after, to Edinburgh, lying both quiet, until the convention of the ſtates of Scotland was called.

After their lordſhips were gone to Scotland, I went to Watford, where my lord Kilſythe, as lieutenant colonel, commanded the lord Dunmore's regiment of dragoons; the reſt of the army, which had been there, being gone to other places. Then major-general Mc. Coy ordered the lord Kilſythe to march the regiment from place to place, until they ſhould come to Congerton, a town in Cheſhire. Here they quartered, when the prince and princeſs of Orange were proclaimed king and queen of England, &c. by the ſheriff and three or four bailiffs. It happened to be a very ſtormy day; and when the ſheriff had done his office, a crack-brained fellow, at the head of a great rabble, proclaimed

When my lord Dundee refuſed to ſerve the prince of Orange, Sir Thomas Levingſton, of my lord Kilſythe's family, got the regiment. This gentleman was born in Holland, and often uſed to raiſe recruits in Scotland; upon which account, he was well known to the regiment. He came down poſt to Congerton, and at ſupper, told the officers, that he was ſent to know, which of them would ſerve king William, and which would not? Now the oath of allegiance to that prince, having not been offered to that regiment, one of the company anſwered; that we, having ſworn allegiance to king James, could not, in conſcience and honour, draw our ſwords againſt him: Whereupon Sir Thomas, drinking an health to king James, upon his knees, anſwered, that he wiſhed he might be damned, whenever he ſhould command them to break that oath. And, in order to ingratiate himſelf further with the regiment, added, that he would return to London next day, for a command

mand to march them ſtrait to Scotland, where their wives and friends were; and likewiſe to procure a captain's commiſſion for me, ſince Sir Adam Blaire, who commanded the troop in which I was lieutenant, had refuſed to ſerve king William; both which he accordingly obtained.

When he returned from London, he marched with the regiment directly through Berwick into Scotland; and as they paſſed by Edinburgh, (the caſtle whereof was kept for king James, by the duke of Gordon) Sir Thomas and my lord Kilſythe went into the town, to receive duke Hamilton's commands, who was then high commiſſioner; and ſome other officers went in at the ſame time, to ſee their wives and friends.

The duke aſked Sir Thomas, where I was? And, being informed that I was gone to Sterling, deſired I might be ſent for. Upon my attending his grace, he was pleaſed to ſay, that he had been always my friend; and that now he had it in his power to provide for me, if I would be true to my truſt; (for he ſuppoſed poſed I had taken the oath to king William) and, upon my anſwer, that I would be true to what I had ſworn, the duke replied, it was very well.

Upon this occaſion, and before I proceed further, I think it will be proper to make ſome apology for my future conduct; becauſe I am conſcious, that many people, who are in another intereſt, may be apt to think and ſpeak hardly of me: But I deſire they would pleaſe to conſider, that the revolution was then an event altogether new, and had put many men much wiſer than myſelf, at a loſs how to proceed. I had taken the oath of allegiance to king James; and having been bred up under the ſtricteſt principles of loyalty, could not force my conſcience to diſpenſe with that oath, during his majeſty's life. All thoſe perſons of quality in Scotland, to whom I had been moſt obliged, and on whom I chiefly depended, did ſtill adhere to that prince. Thoſe people, whom, from my youth, I had been taught to abhor; whom, by the commands of my ſuperiors, I had conſtantly treated as rebels; and who, con-ſequently conceived an irreconcileable animoſity againſt me; were, upon this great change, the higheſt in favour and employments. And laſtly, the eſtabliſhed religion in Scotland, which was epiſcopal, under which I had been educated, and to which I had always borne the higheſt veneration, was utterly deſtroyed in that kingdom (although preſerved in the other two) and the preſbyterian kirk, which had ever been my greateſt averſion, exalted in its ſtead.

Upon all theſe conſiderations, I hope every candid reader will be ſo juſt to believe, that, ſuppoſing me in an error I acted at leaſt ſincerely, and according to the dictates of my conſcience; and, as it is manifeſt, without any worldly view: For, I had then conſiderable offers made me, and in all probability ſhould have been greatly advanced, if I could have perſuaded myſelf to accept them.

Having ſaid thus much to excuſe my conduct, from that time forward, I ſhall now proceed to relate facts and paſſages, juſt as they happened; and avoid, as much as poſſible, giving any offence.

My

My lord Dunmore being then at Edinburgh, I thought it my duty to pay my reſpects to his lordſhip, who had been alſo my colonel. He was pleaſed to invite me to dine with him that day at a tavern; where he ſaid lieutenant general Douglaſs, (who had left England, a little before, on ſome pretence or other) the lord Kilſythe captain Murray, (all his a'ne lads, as his lordſhip expreſſed himſelf) were to meet him. I objected againſt Douglaſs, that he was not to be truſted; (this was the ſame man, who afterwards was lieutenant general of king William's army in Ireland, againſt king James; and whoſe name will never be forgot in that kingdom, on account of his many ravages and barbarities committed there;) but his lordſhip anſwered, that he would pawn his life for his honeſty; becauſe my lord Dundee had aſſured him, that the lieutenant general had given him his faith and honour, to be with him in five days, if he marched to the hills to declare for king James. Whereupon I ſubmitted my ſcruples to my colonel's judgment; and accordingly we all met together at the tavern.

Dinner was no ſooner done, than we heard the news that king James was landed in Ireland: Then Douglaſs taking a beer-glaſs, and looking round him, ſaid, Gentlemen we have all eat of his bread, and here is his health; which he drank off, on his knees; and all the company did the ſame: Then filling another bumper, he drank damnation to all, who would ever draw a ſword againſt him.

I then returned to Sterling, and ſoon after, the ſtates of Scotland met. To this convention by lord Dundee went incognito; leſt the rabble, who had threatened his perſon, ſhould aſſault him in the ſtreets. He made a ſpeech to the houſe, to the following purpoſe: "That he "came thither as peer of the realm to "ſerve his majeſty; and that if the king "had no ſervice for him, he hoped, that "honourable aſſembly would protect him "as a peaceable ſubject, from the rage of "his enemies."

Upon receiving an anſwer from the ſtates, that they could not poſſibly do it, he

he ſlipped out of the houſe, and privately withdrew from the town; followed by the twenty four troopers, who had attended him thither: And, as he rode by the caſtle, ſeeing the duke of Gordon, who commanded it, walking on the walls; he charged his grace, to keep the place for king James, till he ſhould hear further from him, who was then going, he ſaid, to appear in the field for his majeſty.

His lordſhip had no ſooner left the town, than one major Bunting, with a party, (by order from the convention) followed, with directions to ſeize him; whereupon my lord Dundee, commanding his attendants to march on gently, ſtopped to ſpeak with the major; and, underſtanding his errand, adviſed him to return, or he would ſend him back to his maſters in a pair of blankets, as he expreſſed himſelf. The major (who perhaps was no enemy to his lordſhip) returned accordingly; and my lord arrived at his caſtle; where he ſtayed only that night: For in the morning, taking four thouſand pounds with him, he went into the Highlands, to Sir Owen Cameron;

where he was ſoon joined by the laird of Cappagh, who, ſometime before, had been driven out of his eſtate by order of king James, (as I have already related) and by many other gentlemen of quality.

Major general Mc. Coy, coming to Edinburgh at this juncture, was ordered to march the forces, which he brought with him, againſt my lord Dundee. Theſe forces conſiſted of three or four regiments of foot, and one of horſe; beſides Sir Thomas Levingſton's of dragoons. They ſtopped, in their march, a night or two at Dundee. The firſt night, I got privately into the caſtle (as it had been agreed between my lord Kilſythe and me) and there aſſured my lady Dundee, that the regiment of dragoons, in which I ſerved, ſhould be at the lord's ſervice, whenever he pleaſed to command; whereof her ladyſhip gave notice next day to her huſband; who ſent me a note, by a ragged highlander, which I received as we were on our march from the town of Dundee towards the Highlands. The contents of my lord's note, were, "That "he had written to the king, to ſend "him

"him two thouſand foot, and one thou-
"ſand horſe out of Ireland; and that,
"as ſoon as thoſe forces were arrived, he "would expect me with a regiment of
"dragoons."

When major general Mc. Coy came within ſight of my lord Dundee, night coming on, obliged him to halt; which gave opportunity to his lordſhip to retreat in the morning; but Mc. Coy followed him all day; whereupon, facing about, my lord advanced towards him, which cauſed the major general to retreat in his turn. Thus we ſpent about three weeks, ſometimes purſuing, and ſometimes purſued; our leader, Mc. Coy, ſtill writing every poſt, for new ſupplies; till at laſt, one regiment of dragoons, and another of foot, came to his aſſiſtance on the 5th of June, 1689. When this reinforcement came, he got intelligence of my lord Kilſythe's intention, and mine, of going over with the regiment to my lord Dundee.

All people agreed, that lieutenant general Douglaſs, who had made ſo many ſolemn profeſſions of his loyalty to king

James, and whoſe health he had drank on his knees, was the very perſon, who had given this intelligence to Mc. Coy; becauſe he alone knew what had paſſed at the tavern, where we dined; and becauſe, inſtead of going with Dundee, as he had promiſed him, upon his faith and honour, he had rid poſt for London.

From this period, my troubles began; for I was then ſent up to Edinburgh, and there impriſoned in the Tolbooth, together with my lord Kilſythe, captain Levingſton, captain Murray, and lieutenant Murray; each of us in a ſeparate dungeon; with orders that none ſhould be permitted to ſpeak with us, except through the key-hole: And in this miſerable condition we lay for two months.

My lord Kilſythe's friends were under great apprehenſions that I would betray his lordſhip. But my lord did me the juſtice to aſſure them, that I would ſuffer the worſt extremity rather than be guilty of ſo infamous an action; which, he ſaid, they ſhould find, upon any temptation that might offer. When we had been cloſe confined in our dungeons for two months, we were brought before the council, one by one, to be examined, concerning our knowledge of my lord Kilſythe's intention, to carry off the regiment. Levingſton and the two Murrays, having not been privy to that deſign, were able to diſcover nothing to his lordſhip's prejudice; and were likewiſe gentlemen of too much honour, to purchaſe their liberty with a lye: Whereupon they were remanded back to their ſeveral dungeons. It was my turn to be next examined; and I was ſtrongly ſuſpected; but notwithſtanding my liberty was promiſed me, if I would diſcover all I knew of the matter, the lord advocate at the ſame time alſo urging, I muſt have certainly been privy to it; I poſitively denied any knowledge of that affair, adding, that I believed my lord Kilſythe had never entertained ſuch a deſign; or, if he had, that it was altogether improbable his lordſhip ſhould impart it to me, a poor ſtranger born in Ireland, and yet keep it a ſecret from gentlemen of the kingdom, in whom he might much better confide. This I ſtill repeated, and ſtood to with great great firmneſs, even after I ſaw the hangman, with the torturing boots, ſtanding at my back: Whereupon I was likewiſe returned to my dungeon.

The council, although they could force no confeſſion from me, or my companions, that might affect my lord Kilſythe, on whoſe eſtate their hearts were much ſet, yet reſolved to make a ſacrifice of ſome one among us. But, the other gentlemen being of their own kindred and country, and I a ſtranger, as well as much hated for proſecuting the covenanters, (who by the change of the times, meaſures, and opinions, were now grown into high favour with the government, as I have before mentioned) the lot fell on me, and they gave out a report, that I ſhould be hanged within a few days. But, a gentleman, then in town, one Mr. Buchannan, who held a ſecret correſpondence with my lord Dundee, ſent his lordſhip intelligence of this their reſolution concerning me.

That lord was then at the caſtle of Blair of Atholl; and, having notice of the danger I was in, wrote a letter to duke duke Hamilton, preſident of the council, deſiring his grace to inform the board, "That if they hanged captain Creichton, "or, (to uſe his own homely expreſſion,) "if they touched an hair of his tail, he "would cut the laird of Blair, and the "laird of Pollock, joint by joint, and "would ſend their limbs in hampers to "the council."

Theſe two gentlemen having been taken priſoners at St. Johnſtown, by my lord Dundee, were ſtill kept in confinement. Whereupon the duke, though it was night, called the council, which met immediately, ſuppoſing that the buſineſs, which preſſed ſo much, might relate to ſome expreſs from court. But when the clerk read my lord Dundee's letter, they appeared in great confuſion: Whereupon the duke ſaid, "I fear we dare not touch "an hair of Creichton;" for ye all know Dundee too well, to doubt whether he will be punctual to his word; and the two gentlemen in his hands are too nearly allied to ſome here, that their lives ſhould be endangered on this occaſion. What his grace ſaid was very true; for, if I remember right, the laird of Blair had married a daughter of a former duke of Hamilton. The iſſue of the matter was, that, under this perplexity, they all cried out, " Let the fellow live a while " longer."

Not long after this, happened the battle of Gillicranky, near the caſtle of the Blair of Atholl; where the forces under the lord Dundee, conſiſting of no more than ſeventeen hundred foot, (all Highlanders, except three hundred ſent him from Ireland, under the command of colonel Cannon, when he expected three thouſand, as I have mentioned,) and forty-five horſe, routed an army of five thouſand men, with major general Mc. Coy at their head; took fifteen hundred priſoners, and killed a great number, among whom colonel Balfour was one. Mc. Coy eſcaped, and fled that night twenty-five miles end-ways, to the caſtle of Drummond.

But my lord Dundee did not live to ſee himſelf victorious: For, as he was wheeling about a rock, over the enemy's heads, and making down the bray to attack tack them, (they making a running fire,) he was killed by a random ſhot, at the beginning of the action: Yet his men diſcovered not his fall, till they had obtained the victory. The next day, though victorious, they ſuffered their priſoners to depart, on parole, that they would never take up arms againſt king James, colonel Fergusſon only excepted, on account of his more than ordinary zeal for the new eſtabliſhment.

King William, having heard of this defeat, ſaid, "He knew the lord Dundee "ſo well, that he muſt have been either "killed or mortally wounded; otherwiſe, "before that time, he would have been "maſter of Edinburgh."

I now deſire leave to return to my own affairs. About four months after my examination, I was adviſed, in plain words, by the dukes of Hamilton and Queenſberry, who were then going up to London, that I ſhould bribe Melvil, then ſecretary of Scotland; with whom their graces likewiſe would uſe their intereſt, to get an order from king William for my liberty. But I was ſo far from having ing money to bribe a courtier of the ſecretary's rank, that I had hardly enough to ſupport myſelf. Whereupon my noble friend, the lord Kilſyth, who thought himſelf indebted to my fidelity for his life and fortune, was ſo extremely generous, as to make me a preſent of five hundred pounds, which I immediately ſent to Melvil; who thereupon, joining his intereſt with the good offices of the two dukes beforementioned, prevailed with king William, to ſend down an order; upon the receipt of which, I was to be ſet at liberty by the council. But they would not obey it; alledging that the king was miſinformed; and out of the abundance of their zeal, wrote to him, that if captain Creichton ſhould obtain his liberty, he would murder all Scotland in one night.

Thus my hope of liberty vaniſhed: For king William ſoon after going to Flanders, and not thinking it prudent to diſcredit the repreſentation which the council had made of me, as ſo very dangerous a perſon, left me in the Tolbooth; though the two dukes, out of their great friendſhip, (which I ſhould be moſt ungrateful grateful ever to forget) had both offered to anſwer body for body, for my peaceable demeanour. But notwithſtanding all this, king William, for the reaſon beforementioned, left me priſoner in the Tolbooth, as I ſaid; where I continued two years and a half longer, without one penny of money; though not without many friends, whoſe charity and generoſity ſupported me under this heavy affliction.

My wife and two boys, with as many daughters, were in town all the time of my confinement. The boys died young, but the mother and the two girls lived to endure many hardſhips; having been twice plundered by the rabble, of the little ſubſtance they had left; however, they and myſelf were ſtill providentially relieved by ſome friend or other; and particularly once, by the lady Carnwath, (mother of the preſent earl) who, when we had not one penny left to buy bread, ſent us up a ſack of meal, and a baſket of fowl, ſixty miles from Edinburgh.

My fellow-priſoners and I, after the time of our examination by the council, were allowed, for four or five hours every day, day, to converſe with each other, and with our friends: And, when we had been three years in the Tolbooth, my companions, being related to the beſt families in the kingdom, were at laſt permitted, on bail, to lodge in the city, with a centry at each of their doors. But I was not allowed the ſame favour, till two months after; when duke Hamilton, ſtill my friend, with much difficulty and ſtrong application to the council, obtained it for me: And, when the order was at laſt granted, I was at a great loſs to find ſuch a perſon for my bail, whom the council would approve of; till the laird of Pettencrife, a gentleman, whom I had never ſeen before, ſent up his name (without any application from me) to the clerk, and was accordingly accepted.

I had not been two months diſcharged out of the Tolbooth, and removed to a private lodging in the town, with a centry upon me, when the government, upon ſome pretence or other, filled the caſtle with a great number of perſons of quality; among whom were the lords Kilſythe, Hume, and ſeveral others; and the Tol-

booth again, with as many of inferior note, as it could hold.

In a week, after I had been permitted to live in the city with my family; I found the centry had orders to keep me cloſe, without allowing me to ſtir from my lodgings upon any pretence whatſoever: But when another regiment came to relieve that, which was before upon duty, I bribed him, who had been my keeper, at his going off, that he ſhould tell the firſt who came in his place, that his orders were to walk with me to any part of the town I pleaſed. This was accordingly done, and thenceforward, I uſed to take my centry along with me, and viſit my old fellow priſoners, the Gillicrankymen, and ſometimes ſtay with them all night; at other times, my friends would do the ſame at my lodgings; among whom the lord William Douglaſs often did me that honour: Nay, ſometimes, in company of ſome gentlemen, I would leave the centry drinking with the foot-men in an ale-houſe, at the back of the town-wall, while we rambled nine or ten miles into the country, to viſit ſome acquaintance or other; ſtill taking care to return before two in the afternoon, which was the hour of parade, to ſave the centry from danger.

Thus I ſpent above two months, till the day the government had filled the Caſtle and the Tolbooth again, as I have mentioned already. As ſoon as I was told of my lord Kilſythe's impriſonment, I knew the danger I was in, and had juſt time to run with the centry to a cellar, where I found twelve officers got together for ſhelter likewiſe from the ſtorm, a little before me. We ſtayed there cloſe till night, and then diſpatched my centry, with captain Mair's footman, to the lady Lockhart's (who was married to the captain) four miles out of town, to let her know, that her huſband would be at home that night, with twelve other Cavaliers (for ſo in thoſe days we affected to ſtyle ourſelves) to avoid being impriſoned in the Tolbooth.

When the meſſage was delivered, the lady ordered three or four of her ſervants, to take up the centry four pair of ſtairs, and to ply him well with drink. Accordingly cordingly they kept him drunk for twelve days and nights together, ſo that he neither ſaw me, nor I him, in all that time. Two days after we came to lady Lockhart's, I determined, againſt her and her friend's advice, to return privately to Edinburgh, to diſcourſe with the laird of Pettencrife, my bail: reſolving at all adventures, that ſo generous a perſon ſhould not be a ſufferer, on my account. I accordingly repaired, in the night, to the ſame ale-houſe, at the back of the town-wall, and thence ſent the foot-man, who attended me, to bring the laird thither. He preſently came, with two other gentlemen in his company; and, after drinking together for half an hour, "He "bid me go whither I pleaſed, and God's "bleſſing along with me;" whereupon, thruſting me out at the door, in a friendly manner, added, that he would pay the hundred pounds, he was bound in, to the council, next morning, if demanded of him, which they accordingly did, and the money was paid.

I then returned to the company, at my lady Lockhart's, and thence wrote to the two dukes beforementioned for their advice, what courſe to take? Their anſwer was, "That in regard to my poor family, "I ſhould make my eſcape to my own "country, and there ſet potatoes, till I "ſaw better times." At the end of twelve days, captain Mair and his eleven friends got over ſeas to St. Germains; when I likewiſe took my leave of them and the lady, to make the beſt of my way for Ireland. But I bethought me of the poor centry, (to whom the twelve days, we ſtayed there, ſeemed no longer than two or three, ſo well was he plyed with drink) and calling for him, aſked whether he would chuſe to ſhare with me and my fortunes, or go back to the regiment, perhaps to be ſhot for neglect of his duty? He readily anſwered, that he would go with me whither ever I went; and not long after we came into Ireland, I had the good luck to get him made a ſerjeant of grenadiers, in the regiment, formerly commanded by my lord Dunbarton, by a captain, who was then gone thither for recruits; in which regiment he died a lieutenant ſome years after.

The lady, at parting, made me a preſent of a good horſe, with ten dollars, to bear my charges on the way; and moreover hired a tenant's horſe to carry the centry to the Borders. I durſt not be ſeen to paſs through Galloway, and therefore went by Carliſle to Whitehaven. Here I found an acquaintance, who was miniſter of the town, of the name of Marr; a gentleman of great worth and learning. Before the Revolution, he had been miniſter of a pariſh in Scotland, near the Borders: But about the time of that event, the rabble, as he told me the ſtory, came to his houſe, in the night, to rob and murder him; having treated others, of his brethren, the epiſcopal clergy, before in that inhuman manner. He was a ſingle man, and had but one man-ſervant, whoſe buſineſs was to dreſs his meat, and make his bed; and while the villains were breaking into the houſe, he had juſt time to put on his breeches, ſtockings, and ſhoes, and no more; for by that time they were got in; when he thought it better to leap out at the window, but half cloathed, as he was, than to expoſe his life to the fury of ſuch, whoſe very mercies might be cruel. Thus he ſaved his life, and made his eſcape to the Engliſh ſide, with only four dollars in his pocket; leaving his goods, houſe, and pariſh, as plunder, to thoſe ſaints; who, doubtleſs, looked on ſuch as he was, as no other than an uſurper of what, of right, pertained to them; purſuant to the maxim, That dominion is founded in grace.

And here I beg leave to relate the treatment, which another eſpiſcopal clergyman received from that tribe, about the ſame time: His name was Kirkwood, whom I likewiſe knew, before the Revolution, miniſter of a pariſh in Galloway, in Scotland, and afterwards rector in the county of Fermanagh, in Ireland. Among other good qualities, this gentleman was a very facetious perſon; and by his preſence of mind, in making uſe of this talent, he had the good fortune to ſave both his life and goods, from the fury of thoſe godly men, who then thought all things their own. When they broke into the houſe, he was in bed; and ſitting up in his ſhirt, deſired leave to ſpeak a few words before he died; which (I cannot tell how it happened) they granted, and he ſpoke to this effect; That he had always prayed to God, he might die in his bed; adding, that he had in his houſe as good Ale and Brandy, as was in all Scotland; and therefore hoped the worthy Gentlemen would do him the Honour to drink with him, before they did any Thing raſhly.

This facetious ſpeech which they little expected from him, in the article of ſo much danger, as then threatened him, had the luck to divert them from their bloody purpoſe, and to make them comply with his requeſt: So that after drinking plentifully, they ſaid he was an hearty cheel; and left him in quiet poſſeſſion of his houſe and goods. But he durſt not truſt his talent to another trial, leſt the next company might not be influenced as this firſt had been; and therefore as ſoon as it was day, made off, with his family and effects, in the beſt manner he could; and reſted not until he was ſafe in Ireland.

I could not forbear relating theſe ſtories, from the gentlemen's own mouths, as I might do others of the ſame kind, upon my own knowledge; although they are contradictory to what the preachers of the new eſtabliſhed kirk have ſo confidently given out. They would fain have the world believe, that they ſhewed great indulgence to the epiſcopal clergy, at the revolution, and for ſeveral years after. But they muſt grant me and others leave not to believe them: Nor ought they to be angry, if I give the reader a further idea of them, and of the ſpirit that reigned in the ſynods, conventions, or general aſſemblies of their kirk.

During my confinement in the Tolbooth, a general aſſembly was called; to which my lord Lothian, as I was informed afterwards, was ſent commiſſioner from king William. His lordſhip's inſtructions were, to ſignify to them the king's deſire, that as many of the epiſcopal clergy, as would take the oath of allegiance to him, might keep poſſeſſion of their ſeveral pariſhes. To this the members anſwered in a diſdainful manner, What! ſhall ſhall we ſuffer any ſcabbed ſheep among us? Na, na, nat ane; and thereupon ſent two of their brethren to king William, who was then in Flanders to move him for more favours to the kirk, and power, further to oppreſs the epiſcopal clergy. But that prince told them, in plain terms, that he had been impoſed upon, in granting to the kirk, the favours ſhe had already got; and withal commanded them, to let the general aſſembly know, that it was his will and pleaſure, that they ſhould live peaceably with thoſe who were willing to live ſo with them; otherwiſe he would make them know, that he was their maſter.

With this unwelcome anſwer, from king William, the two ſpiritual envoys returned to thoſe who ſent them; and at the ſame time, or ſoon after, the prince diſpatched an order to the commiſſioner to diſſolve the aſſembly, if he found them perſiſting in their ſeverity, towards the epiſcopal clergy.

As ſoon as the legates delivered the meſſage, all in the aſſembly began to ſpeak out with the greateſt boldneſs imaginable;

ginable; ſaying, "That the king durſt "not have ſent them ſuch an anſwer, if "he had not an army at his back." Whereupon the commiſſioner diſſolved the ſynod; and, in the king's name, commanded all the members to depart to their ſeveral homes.

But, inſtead of obeying that order, they all went in a body, with that poor weak creature the lord Crawford, at their head, to the Market-Croſs; and there publiſhed a proteſtation, declaring, that the king had no authority in church affairs, nor any right to diſſolve their general aſſembly.

I relate this ſtory, as it was told me, not only to give the reader an idea of the ſpirit, that reigned in that kirk, eſtabliſhed now in Scotland, as I have ſaid, but likewiſe to do juſtice to the memory of king William, (which may be the more acceptable, as coming from one, who was in a contrary intereſt.) And, indeed, I have ſo good an opinion of that prince, as to believe he would have acted much better than he did, with regard to the civil and eccleſiaſtical conſtitution in Scot- land, if he had been permitted to govern by his own opinions.

But now to come to the concluſion of my ſtory. The * Hollantide after I arrived in Ireland, my wife and two daughters followed me; and we ſettled in the county of Tyrone, with my father, (who died two years afterwards) on a ſmall freehold; where I have made an hard ſhift to maintain them with induſtry and even manual labour, for about twelve years, till my wife died, and my daughters were married, which happened not very long after I became a widower.

I am at preſent in the eighty third year of my age, ſtill hated by thoſe people, who affirm the old covenanters to have been unjuſtly dealt with; and therefore believe a great number of improbable ſtories concerning me; as that I was a common murderer of them and their preachers, with many other falſe and improbable ſtories. But the reader, I hope, from whom I have not concealed any one tranſaction or adventure, that happened to me among thoſe rebellious people, or miſrepreſented the leaſt circumſtance, as far as my memory could ſerve me; will judge whether he hath reaſon to believe me, to have been ſuch a perſon as they repreſented me; and to hate me, as they do, upon that account. And my comfort is, that I can appeal from their unjuſt tribunal, to the mercy of God; before whom, by the courſe of nature, I muſt ſoon appear; who knows the integrity of my heart, and that my actions (condemned by them) were as far as my underſtanding could direct me, meant for the good of the church, and the ſervice of my king and country.

And, although ſuch people hate me becauſe they give credit to the falſe reports raiſed concerning me; another comfort left me in my old age is, that I have conſtantly preſerved (and ſtill do ſo) the love and eſteem of all honeſt and good men, to whom I have had the happineſs at any time to be known.

I HAVE obſerved few obvious ſubjects to have been ſo ſeldom, or, at leaſt, ſo ſlightly handled as this; and, indeed, I know few ſo difficult, to be treated as it ought, nor yet upon which there ſeemeth ſo much to be ſaid.

Moſt things, purſued by men for the happineſs of public or private life, our wit or folly have ſo refined, that they ſeldom ſubſiſt but in idea; a true friend, a good marriage, a perfect form of government, with ſome others, require ſo many ingredients, ſo good in their ſeveral kinds, and ſo much niceneſs in mixing them, that for ſome thouſands of years men have deſpaired of reducing their ſchemes to perfection: But, in converſation, tion, it is, or might be otherwiſe; for here we are only to avoid a multitude of errors, which, although a matter of ſome difficulty, may be in every man's power, for want of which it remaineth as mere an idea as the other. Therefore it ſeemeth to me, that the trueſt way to underſtand converſation, is to know the faults and errors to which it is ſubject, and from thence every man to form maxims to himſelf whereby it may be regulated, becauſe it requireth few talents to which moſt men are not born, or at leaſt may not acquire without any great genius or ſtudy. For nature hath left every man a capacity of being agreeable, though not of ſhining in company; and there are an hundred men ſufficiently qualified for both, who, by a very few faults, that they might correct in half an hour, are not ſo much as tolerable.

I was prompted to write my thoughts upon this ſubject by mere indignation, to reflect that ſo uſeful and innocent a pleaſure, ſo fited for every period and condition of life, and ſo much in all men's

And in this diſcourſe it will be neceſſary to note thoſe errors that are obvious, as well as others which are ſeldomer obſerved, ſince there are few ſo obvious, or acknowledged, into which moſt men, ſome time or other, are not apt to run.

For inſtance: Nothing is more generally exploded than the folly of talking too much; yet I rarely remember to have ſeen five people together, where ſome one among them hath not been predominant in that kind, to the great conſtraint and diſguſt of all the reſt. But among ſuch as deal in multitudes of words, none are comparable to the ſober deliberate talker, who proceedeth with much thought and caution, maketh his preface, brancheth out into ſeveral digreſſions, findeth a hint that putteth him in mind of another ſtory, which he promiſeth to tell you when this is done; cometh back regularly to his ſubject, cannot readily call to mind ſome perſon's name, holding his head, complaineth of his memory; the whole company all this while in ſuſpence; at length ſays, it is no matter, and ſo goes on. And, to crown the buſineſs, it perhaps proveth at laſt a ſtory the company hath heard fifty times before; or, at beſt, ſome inſipid adventure of the relater.

Another general fault in converſation is, that of thoſe who affect to talk of themſelves: Some, without any ceremony, will run over the hiſtory of their lives; will relate the annals of their diſeaſes, with the ſeveral ſymptoms and circumſtances of them; will enumerate the hardſhips and injuſtice they have ſuffered in court, in parliament, in love, or in law. Others are more dexterous, and with great art will lie on the watch to hook in their own praiſe: They will call a witneſs to remember, they always foretold what would happen in ſuch a caſe, but none would believe them; they adviſed ſuch a man from the beginning, and told him the conſequences, juſt as they happened; but he would have his own way. Others make a vanity of telling their faults; they are the ſtrangeſt men in the world; they cannot diſſemble; they own it is a folly; they have loſt loſt abundance of advantages by it; but, if you would give them the world, they cannot help it; there is ſomething in their nature that abhors inſincerity and conſtraint; with many other inſufferable topicks of the ſame altitude.

Of ſuch mighty importance every man is to himſelf, and ready to think he is ſo to others; without once making this eaſy and obvious reflexion, that his affairs can have no more weight with other men, than their's have with him; and how little that is, he is ſenſible enough.

Where company hath met, I often have obſerved two perſons diſcover, by ſome accident, that they were bred together at the ſame ſchool or univerſity, after which the reſt are condemned to ſilence, and to liſten while theſe two are refreſhing each other's memory with the arch tricks and paſſages of themſelves and their comrades.

I know a great officer of the army, who will ſit for ſome time with a ſupercilious and impatient ſilence, full of anger and contempt for thoſe who are talking; at length of a ſudden demand audience, decide the matter in a ſhort dogmatical way; then withdraw within himſelf again, and vouchſafe to talk no more, until his ſpirits circulate again to the ſame point.

There are ſome faults in converſation, which none are ſo ſubject to as the men of wit, nor ever ſo much as when they are with each other. If they have opened their mouths, without endeavouring to ſay a witty thing, they think it is ſo many words loſt: It is a torment to the hearers, as much as to themſelves, to ſee them upon the rack for invention, and in perpetual conſtraint, with ſo little ſucceſs. They muſt do ſomething extraordinary, in order to acquit themſelves, and anſwer their character, elſe the ſtanders-by may be diſappointed and be apt to think them only like the reſt of mortals. I have known two men of wit induſtriouſly brought together, in order to entertain the company, where they have made a very ridiculous figure, and provided all the mirth at their own expence.

I know a man of wit, who is never eaſy but where he can be allowed to dictate and preſide; he neither expecteth

to be informed or entertained, but to diſplay his own talents. His buſineſs is to be good company, and not good converſation; and, therefore, he chuſeth to frequent thoſe who are content to liſten, and profeſs themſelves his admirers. And, indeed, the worſt converſation I ever remember to have heard in my life, was that at Will's coffee-houſe, where the wits (as they were called) uſed formerly to aſſemble; that is to ſay, five or ſix men, who had writ plays, or at leaſt prologues, or had ſhare in a miſcellany, came thither, and entertained one another with their trifling compoſures, in ſo important an air, as if they had been the nobleſt efforts of human nature, or that the fate of kingdoms depended on them; and they were uſually attended with an humble audience of young ſtudents from the inns of court, or the univerſities, who, at due diſtance, liſtened to theſe oracles, and returned home with great contempt for their law and philoſophy, their heads filled with traſh, under the name of politeneſs, criticiſm and belles lettres.

By theſe means the poets, for many years paſt, were all over-run with pedantry. For, as I take it, the word is not properly uſed; becauſe pedantry is the too frequent or unſeaſonable obtruding our own knowledge in common diſcourſe, and placing too great a value upon it; by which definition, men of the court or the army may be as guilty of pedantry as a philoſopher or a divine; and, it is the ſame vice in women, when they are over-copious upon the ſubject of their petticoats, or their fans, or their china. For which reaſon, although it be a piece of prudence, as well as good manners, to put men upon talking on ſubjects they are beſt verſed in, yet that is a liberty a wiſe man could hardly take; becauſe, beſide the imputation of pedantry, it is what he would never improve by.

The great town is uſually provided with ſome player, mimick or buffoon, who hath a general reception at the good tables; familiar and domeſtick with perſons of the firſt quality, and uſually ſent for at every meeting to divert the company; againſt which I have no objection.

You

You go there as to a farce or a puppet ſhow; your buſineſs is only to laugh in ſeaſon, either out of inclination or civility, while his merry companion is acting his part. It is a buſineſs he hath undertaken, and we are to ſuppoſe he is paid for his day's work. I only quarrel, when in ſelect and private meetings, where men of wit and learning are invited to paſs an evening, this jeſter ſhould be admitted to run over his circle of tricks, and make the whole company unfit for any other converſation, beſides the indignity of confounding mens talents at ſo ſhameful a rate.

Raillery is the fineſt part of converſation; but, as it is our uſual cuſtom to counterfeit and adulterate whatever is too dear for us, ſo we have done with this; and turned it all into what is generally called repartee, or being ſmart; juſt as when an expenſive faſhion cometh up, thoſe who are not able to reach it, content themſelves with ſome paltry imitation. It now paſſeth for raillery to run a man down in diſcourſe, to put him out of countenance, and make him ridiculous, ſometimes to expoſe the defects of his perſon or underſtanding; on all which occaſions he is obliged not to be angry, to avoid the imputation of not being able to take a jeſt. It is admirable to obſerve one who is dextrous at this art, ſingling out a weak adverſary, getting the laugh on his ſide, and then carrying all before him. The French, from whom we borrow the word, have a quite different idea of the thing, and ſo had we in the politer age of our fathers. Raillery was to ſay ſomething that at firſt appeared a reproach or reflexion, but by ſome turn of wit unexpected and ſurpriſing, ended always in a compliment, and to the advantage of the perſon it was addreſſed to. And ſurely one of the beſt rules in converſation is, never to ſay a thing which any of the company can reaſonably wiſh we had rather left unſaid; nor can there any thing be well more contrary to the ends for which people meet together, than to part unſatisfied with each other or themſelves.

There are two faults in converſation, which appear very different, yet ariſe from the

the ſame root, and are equally blameable; I mean, an impatience to interrupt others, and the uneaſineſs of being interrupted ourſelves. The two chief ends of converſation are to entertain and improve thoſe we are among, or to receive thoſe benefits ourſelves; which whoever will conſider, cannot eaſily run into either of thoſe two errors; becauſe when any man ſpeaketh in company, it is to be ſuppoſed he doth it for his hearer's ſake, and not his own; ſo that common diſcretion will teach us not to force their attention, if they are not willing to lend it; nor on the other ſide, to interrupt him who is in poſſeſſion, becauſe that is in the groſſeſt manner to give the preference to our own good ſenſe.

There are ſome people, whoſe good manners will not ſuffer them to interrupt you; but, what is almoſt as bad, will diſcover abundance of impatience, and lye upon the watch until you have done, becauſe they have ſtarted ſomething in their own thoughts which they long to be delivered of. Mean time, they are ſo far from regarding what paſſes, that their imaginations are wholly turned upon what they have in reſerve, for fear it ſhould ſlip out of their memory; and thus they confine their invention, which might otherwiſe range over a hundred things full as good, and that might be much more naturally introduced.

There is a ſort of rude familiarity, which ſome people, by practiſing among their intimates, have introduced into their general converſation, and would have it paſs for innocent freedom or humour, which is a dangerous experiment in our northern climate, where all the little decorum and politeneſs we have are purely forced by art, and are ſo ready to lapſe into barbarity. This, among the Romans, was the raillery of ſlaves, of which we have many inſtances in Plautus. It ſeemeth to have been introduced among us by Cromwell, who, by preferring the ſcum of the people, made it a court-entertainment, of which I have heard many particulars; and, conſidering all things were turned upſide down, it was reaſonable and judicious: Although it was a piece of policy found out to ridicule

There are ſome men excellent at telling a ſtory, and provided with a plentiful ſtock of them, which they can draw out upon occaſion in all companies; and, conſidering how low converſation runs now among us, it is not altogether a contemptible talent; however, it is ſubject to two unavoidable defects; frequent repetition, and being ſoon exhauſted; ſo that whoever valueth this gift in himſelf, hath need of a good memory, and ought frequently to ſhift his company, that he may not diſcover the weakneſs of his fund; for thoſe who are thus endowed, have ſeldom any other revenue, but live upon the main ſtock.

Great ſpeakers in publick, are ſeldom agreeable in private converſation, whether their faculty be natural, or acquired by practice and often venturing. Natural elocution, although it may ſeem a paradox, uſually ſpringeth from a barrenneſs of invention and of words, by which men who have only one ſtock of notions upon every every ſubject, and one ſet of phraſes to expreſs them in, they ſwim upon the ſuperficies, and offer themſelves on every occaſion; therefore, men of much learning, and who know the compaſs of a language, are generally the worſt talkers on a ſudden, until much practice hath inured and emboldened them, becauſe they are confounded with plenty of matter, variety of notions, and of words, which they cannot readily chuſe, but are perplexed and entangled by too great a choice; which is no diſadvantage in private converſation; where, on the other ſide, the talent of haranguing is, of all others, moſt inſupportable.

Nothing hath ſpoiled men more for converſation, than the character of being wits, to ſupport which, they never fail of encouraging a number of followers and admirers, who liſt themſelves in their ſervice, wherein they find their accounts on both ſides, by pleaſing their mutual vanity. This hath given the former ſuch an air of ſuperiority, and made the latter ſo pragmatical, that neither of them are well to be endured. I ſay nothing here of the itch of diſpute and contradiction, telling of lies, or of thoſe who are troubled with the diſeaſe called the wandering of the thoughts, that they are never preſent in mind at what paſſeth in diſcourſe; for whoever labours under any of theſe poſſeſſions, is as unfit for converſation as a mad-man in Bedlam.

I think I have gone over moſt of the errors in converſation, that have fallen under my notice or memory, except ſome that are merely perſonal, and others too groſs to need exploding; ſuch as lewd or prophane talk; but I pretend only to treat the errors of converſation in general, and not the ſeveral ſubjects of diſcourſe, which would be infinite. Thus we ſee how human nature is moſt debaſed, by the abuſe of that faculty, which is held the great diſtinction between men and brutes; and how little advantage we make of that which might be the greateſt, the moſt laſting, and the moſt innocent, as well as uſeful pleaſure of life: In default of which, we are forced to take up with thoſe poor amuſements of dreſs and viſiting, or the more pernicious ones of play, play, drink, and vicious amours, whereby the nobility and gentry of both ſexes are entirely corrupted both in body and mind, and have loſt all notions of love, honour, friendſhip, generoſity; which, under the name of fopperies, have been for ſome time laughed out of doors.

This degeneracy of converſation, with the pernicious conſequences thereof upon our humours and diſpoſitions, hath been owing, among other cauſes, to the cuſtom ariſen, for ſome time paſt, of excluding women from any ſhare in our ſociety, further than in parties at play, or dancing, or in the purſuit of an amour. I take the higheſt period of politeneſs in England (and it is of the ſame date in France) to have been the peaceable part of king Charles the Firſt's reign; and from what we read of thoſe times, as well as from the accounts I have formerly met with from ſome who lived in that court, the methods then uſed for raiſing and cultivating converſation, were altogether different from ours: ſeveral ladies, whom we find celebrated by the poetsof that age, had aſſemblies at their houſes, where perſons of the beſt beſt underſtanding, and of both ſexes, met to paſs the evenings in diſcourſing upon whatever agreeable ſubjects were occaſionally ſtarted; and although we are apt to ridicule the ſublime platonic notions they had, or perſonated in love and friendſhip, I conceive their refinements were grounded upon reaſon, and that a little grain of the romance is no ill ingredient to preſerve and exalt the dignity of human nature, without which it is apt to degenerate into every thing that is ſordid, vicious and low. If there were no other uſe in the converſation of ladies, it is ſufficient that it would lay a reſtraint upon thoſe odious topicks of immodeſty and indecencies, into which the rudeneſs of our northern genius is ſo apt to fall. And, therefore, it is obſervable in thoſe ſprightly gentlemen about the town, who are ſo very dextrous at entertaining a vizard maſk in the park or the playhouſe, that, in the company of ladies of virtue and honour, they are ſilent and diſconcerted, and out of their element.

There are ſome people who think they ſufficiently acquit themſelves and entertain their their company with relating of facts of no conſequence, nor at all out of the road of ſuch common incidents as happen every day; and this I have obſerved more frequently among the Scots than any other nation, who are very careful not to omit the minuteſt circumſtances of time or place; which kind of diſcourſe, if it were not a little relieved by the uncouth terms and phraſes, as well as accent and geſture peculiar to that country, would be hardly tolerable. It is not a fault in company to talk much; but to continue it long is certainly one; for, if the majority of thoſe who are got together be naturally ſilent or cautious, the converſation will flag, unleſs it be often renewed by one among them, who can ſtart new ſubjects, provided he doth not dwell upon them, but leaveth room for anſwers and replies.

Of His Excellency

Lord Lieutenant of IRELAND.

With an account of ſome ſmaller Facts during his Government, which will not be put into the Articles of Impeachment.

London, Aug. 30, 1710.

THE kingdom of Ireland being governed by deputation from hence, its annals, ſince the Engliſh eſtabliſhment, are uſually digeſted under the heads of the ſeveral governors: But, the affairs and events of that iſland, for ſome years paſt, have been either ſo inſignificant, or ſo annexed to thoſe of England, that they have not furniſhed matter of any great importance to hiſtory. The ſhare of honour, which gentlemen from thence have had by their conduct and employments ments in the army, turneth all to the article of this kingdom; the reſt, which relateth to politics, or the art of government, is inconſiderable to the laſt degree, however it may be repreſented at court by thoſe who preſide there, and would value themſelves upon every ſtep they make, towards finiſhing the ſlavery of that people, as if it were gaining a mighty point to the advantage of England.

Generally ſpeaking, the times which afford moſt plentiful matter for ſtory, are thoſe in which a man would leaſt chuſe to live; ſuch as under the various events and revolutions of war, the intrigues of a ruined faction, or the violence of a prevailing one; and laſtly, the arbitrary, unlawful acts of oppreſſing governors. In the war, Ireland hath no ſhare but in ſubordination to us; the ſame may be ſaid of their factions, which, at preſent, are but imperfect tranſcripts of ours: But the third ſubject for hiſtory, which is arbitrary power, and oppreſſion; as it is that by which the people of Ireland have, for ſome time, been diſtinguiſhed from all her * majeſty's ſubjects, ſo being now at its greateſt height under his excellency Thomas earl of Wharton, a ſhort account of his government may be of ſome uſe or entertainment to the preſent age, although, I hope, it will be incredible to the next: And, becauſe this account may be judged rather an hiſtory of his excellency, than of his government, I muſt here declare that I have not the leaſt view to his perſon in any part of it. I have had the honour of much converſation with his lordſhip, and am thoroughly convinced how indifferent he is to applauſe, and how inſenſible of reproach: Which is not a humour put on to ſerve a turn, or keep a countenance, nor ariſing from the conſciouſneſs of innocence, or any grandeur of mind, but the mere unaffected bent of his nature.

He is without the ſenſe of ſhame or glory, as ſome men are without the ſenſe of ſmelling; and therefore, a good name to him is no more than a precious ointment would be to theſe. Whoever, for the ſake of others, were to deſcribe the nature of a ſerpent, a wolf, a crocodile, or a fox, muſt be underſtood to do it without any perſonal love or hatred for the animals themſelves.

In the ſame manner his excellency is one whom I neither perſonally love nor hate. I ſee him at court, at his own houſe, and ſometimes at mine (for I have the honour of his viſits) and when theſe papers are public, it is odds but he will tell me, as he once did upon a like occaſion, that he is damnably mauled; and, then with the eaſieſt tranſition in the world, aſk about the weather, or time of the day: So that I enter on the work with more chearfulneſs, becauſe, I am ſure, neither to make him angry, nor any way hurt his reputation; a pitch of happineſs and ſecurity to which his excellency hath arrived, and which no philoſopher before him could reach.

I intend to execute this performance by firſt giving a character of his excellency, and then relating ſome facts during his government, which will ſerve to confirm it.

I know very well that mens characters are beſt known from their actions; but theſe being confined to his adminiſtration in Ireland, his character may, perhaps, take in ſomething more, which the narrowneſs of the time, or the ſcene, hath not given him opportunity to exert.

Thomas, earl of Wharton, lord lieutenant of Ireland, by the force of a wonderful conſtitution, hath paſſed, ſome years, his grand climacteric, without any viſible effects of old age, either on his body or his mind, and in ſpite of a continual proſtitution to thoſe vices which uſually wear out both. His behaviour is in all the forms of a young man at five and twenty. Whether he walketh, or whiſtleth, or ſweareth, or talketh bawdy, or calleth names, he acquitteth himſelf in each beyond a templar of three years ſtanding. With the ſame grace, and in the ſame ſtyle he will rattle his coachman in the middle of the ſtreet, where he is governor of the kingdom; and, all this is without conſequence, becauſe it is in his character, and what every body expecteth. He ſeemeth to be but an ill diſſembler, and an ill liar, although they are the two talents he moſt practiſeth, and moſt valueth himſelf upon. The ends he hath gained by lying appeared to be more owing to the frequency, than the art of them: His lies being ſometimes detected in an hour, often in a day, and always in a week. He tells them freely in mixed companies, although he knows half of thoſe that hear him to be his enemies, and is ſure they will diſcover them the moment they leave him. He ſweareth ſolemnly he loveth, and will ſerve you; and your back is no ſooner turned, but he tells thoſe about him you are a dog and a raſcal. He goeth conſtantly to prayers in the forms of his place, and will talk bawdy and blaſphemy at the chapel door. He is a preſbyterian in politics, and an atheiſt in religion; but he chuſeth at preſent to whore with a papiſt. In his commerce with mankind his general rule is, to endeavour to impoſe on their underſtanding, for which he hath but one receipt, a compoſition of lies and oaths: And this he applieth indifferently to a freeholder of forty ſhillings, and a privy privy counſellor; by which the eaſy and the honeſt are often either deceived or amuſed, and either way he gaineth his point. He will openly take away your employment to-day, becauſe you are not of his party; to-morrow he will meet or ſend for you, as if nothing at all had paſſed, lay his hands with much friendſhip on your ſhoulders, and with the greateſt eaſe and familiarity, tell you that the faction are driving at ſomething in the houſe; that you muſt be ſure to attend, and to ſpeak to all your friends to be there, although he knoweth at the ſame time, that you and your friends are againſt him in the very point he mentioneth: And however abſurd, ridiculous, and groſs this may appear, he hath often found it ſucceſsful; ſome men having ſuch an awkward baſhfulneſs, they know not how to refuſe on a ſudden, and every man having ſomething to hope or fear, which often hinders them from driving things to extremes with perſons of power, whatever provocations they may have received. He hath ſunk his fortune by endeavouring to ruin one kingdom *, hath raiſed it by going far in the ruin of another †. With a good natural underſtanding, a great fluency in ſpeaking, and no ill taſte of wit, he is generally the worſt companion in the world; his thoughts being wholly taken up between vice and politics, ſo that bawdy, prophaneneſs, and buſineſs fill up his whole converſation. To gratify himſelf in the two firſt he maketh uſe of ſuitable favourites, whoſe talents reach no higher than to entertain him with all the lewdneſs that paſſeth in town. As for buſineſs, he is ſaid to be very dextrous at that part of it which turneth upon intrigue, and he ſeemeth to have transferred thoſe talents of his youth for intriguing with women, into public affairs. For as ſome vain young fellows, to make a gallantry appear of conſequence, will chuſe to venture their necks by climbing up a wall or window at midnight to a common wench, where they might as freely have gone in at the door, and at noon-day; ſo his excellency, either to keep himſelf in practice, or advance the fame of his politics, affects the moſt obſcure, troubleſome, and winding paths, even in the moſt common affairs, thoſe which would be brought about as well in the ordinary forms, or would follow of courſe whether he intervened or not.

He bears the gallantries of his lady with the indifference of a Stoic, and thinks them well recompenced by a return of children to ſupport his family without the fatigues of being a father. He has three predominant paſſions, which you will ſeldom find united in the ſame man, as ariſing from different diſpoſitions of mind, and naturally thwarting each other: Theſe are, love of power, love of money, and love of pleaſure; they ride him ſometimes by turns, ſometimes all together: Since he went into Ireland, he ſeemeth moſt diſpoſed to the ſecond, and hath met with great ſucceſs, having gained by his government, of under two years, five and forty thouſand pounds by the moſt favourable computation, half in the regular way, and half in the prudential.

He was never yet known to refuſe or keep a promiſe. But here I deſire to diſtinguiſh between a promiſe and a bargain; for he will be ſure to keep the latter when he has the faireſt offer.

Thus much for his excellency's character; I ſhall now proceed to his actions, only during the time he was governor of Ireland, which were tranſmitted to me by an eminent perſon in buſineſs there, who had all opportunities of being well informed, and whoſe employments did not lie at his excellency's mercy.

This intelligence being made up of ſeveral facts independent of each other, I ſhall hardly be able to relate them in due order of time, my correſpondent omitting that circumſtance, and tranſmitting them to me juſt as he recollected them; ſo that the gentlemen of that kingdom, now in town, will, I hope, pardon me any ſlips I ſhall make in that or any other kind, while I keep exactly to the truth.

Thomas Proby, Eſq. chirurgeon-general of Ireland, a perſon univerſally eſteemed, and whom I have formerly ſeen here, had built a country-houſe, half a mile from

Dublin, adjoining to the park. In a corner of the park, juſt under his houſe, he was much annoyed with a dog-kennel which belonged to the government; upon which he applied to Thomas, earl of Pembroke, then lord lieutenant, and to the commiſſioners of the revenue, for a leaſe of about five acres of that part of the park. His petition was referred to the lord treaſurer here, and ſent back for a report, which was in his favour, and the bargain ſo hard, that the lord treaſurer ſtruck off ſome part of the rent: He had a leaſe granted him, for which he was to build another kennel, provide ice yearly for the government, and pay a certain rent: the land might be worth about thirty ſhillings an acre. His excellency, ſoon after his arrival in Ireland, was told of this leaſe, and, by his abſolute authority, commanded Mr. Proby to ſurrender up the land: Which he was forced to do, after all the expence he had been at, or elſe muſt have expected to loſe his employment; at the ſame time he is under an obligation to pay his rent, and I think he doth it to this day. There are ſeveral ral circumſtances in this ſtory which I have forgot, having not been ſent to me with the reſt; but I had it from a gentleman of that kingdom, who ſome time ago was here.

Upon his excellency's being declared lord lieutenant, there came over, to make his court, one Dr. Lloyd, fellow of Trinity college, Dublin, noted in that kingdom for being the only clergyman, that declared for taking off the ſacramental teſt, as he did openly in their convocation of which he was a member. The merit of this, and ſome other principles ſuitable to it, recommended by Tom Broderick, ſo far ingratiated him with his excellency, that being provided of a proper chaplain already, he took him however into a great degree of favour: The doctor attended his excellency to Ireland, and obſerving a caſt wench in the family to be in much confidence with my lady, he thought, by addreſſing there, to have a ſhort open paſſage to preferment. He met with great ſucceſs in his amour; and walking one day with his miſtreſs after my lord and lady in the Caſtle-Garden, my lady

ſaid to his excellency, "What do you "think? We are going to loſe poor "Foydy," a name of fondneſs they uſually gave her. "How do you mean?" ſaid my lord. "Why the doctor behind us "is reſolved to take her from us." "Is "he, by G—? "Why then (G—d "d—mn me) he ſhall have the firſt "biſhoprick that falls*."

The doctor, thus encouraged, grew a moſt violent lover, returned with his excellency for England, and ſoon after the biſhoprick of Cork falling void, to ſhew he meant fair, he married his damſel publickly here in London, and his excellency as honourably engaged his credit to get him the biſhoprick; but the matter was reckoned ſo infamous, that both the archbiſhops here, eſpecially his grace of York, interpoſed with the queen, to hinder ſo great a ſcandal to the church, and Dr. Brown, provoſt of Dublin college, being then in town, her majeſty was pleaſed to nominate him; ſo that Dr. Lloyd was forced to ſit down with a moderate deanry in the northern parts of that kingdom, and the additional comfort of a ſweet lady, who brought this her firſt huſband no other portion, than a couple of olive branches for his table; though ſhe herſelf hardly knoweth by what hand they were planted.

The queen reſerveth all the great employments of Ireland to be given by herſelf, though often by the recommendation of the chief governor, according to his credit at court. The provoſtſhip of Dublin college is of this number, which was now vacant, upon the promotion of Dr. Brown; Dr. Benjamin Pratt, a fellow of that college, and chaplain to the houſe of commons of that kingdom, as well as domeſtic chaplain to the duke of Ormond, was at that time here, in attendance upon the duke. He is a gentleman of good birth and fortune in Ireland, and lived here in a very decent figure: He is a perſon of wit and learning, hath travelled and converſed in the beſt company, and was very much eſteemed among us here when

when I had the pleaſure of his acquaintance: But he had the original ſin of being a reputed tory, and a dependent on the duke of Ormond; however he had many friends among the biſhops and other nobility to recommend him to the queen; at the ſame time there was another fellow of that college, one Dr. Hall, who had much the advantage of Pratt in point of ſeniority; this gentleman had very little introduced himſelf into the world, but lived retired, though otherwiſe ſaid to be an excellent perſon, and very deſerving for his learning and ſenſe: He had been recommended from Ireland by ſeveral perſons; and his excellency, who had never before ſeen nor thought of him, after having tried to injure the college by recommending perſons from this ſide, at laſt ſet up Hall, with all imaginable zeal, againſt Pratt. I tell this ſtory the more fully, becauſe it is affirmed, by his excellency's friends, that he never made more uſe of his court ſkill, than at this time, to ſtop Dr. Pratt's promotion, not only from the perſonal hatred he had to the man, on account of his patron and principles, ciples, but that he might return to Ireland with ſome little opinion of his credit at court; which had mightily ſuffered by many diſappointments, eſpecially that of his chaplain Dr. Lloyd. It would be incredible to relate the many artifices he uſed to this end, of which the doctor had daily intelligence, and would fairly tell his excellency ſo at his levees, who ſometimes could not conceal his ſurprize, and then would promiſe, with half a dozen oaths, never to concern himſelf one way or other; theſe were broke every day, and every day detected. One morning, after ſome expoſtulation between the doctor and his excellency, and a few additional oaths, that he would never oppoſe him more, his excellency went immediately to the biſhop of Ely, and prevailed on him to go to the queen from him, and let her majeſty know, that he never could conſent as long as he lived, that Dr. Pratt ſhould be provoſt, which the biſhop barely complied with, and delivered his meſſage; though at the ſame time he did the doctor all the good offices he could. The next day the doctor was again with his excellency, and gave him thanks for ſo open a proceeding; the affair was now paſt diſſembling, and his excellency owned he did not oppoſe him directly, but confeſſed he did it collaterally. The doctor a little warmed, ſaid, "No, "my lord, you mean directly you did not, "but indirectly you did." The concluſion was, that the queen named the doctor to the place; and as a further mortification, juſt upon the day of his excellency's departure for Ireland.

But here I muſt deſire the reader's pardon, if I cannot digeſt the following facts in ſo good a manner as I intended; becauſe it is thought expedient, for ſome reaſons, that the world ſhould be informed of his excellency's merits as ſoon as poſſible. I will therefore only tranſcribe the ſeveral paſſages as they were ſent me from Dublin, without either correcting the ſtyle, or adding any remarks of my own. As they are, they may ſerve for hints to any perſon, who may hereafter have a mind to write memoirs of his excellency's life.

THE earl of Rochfort's regiment of dragoons was embarked for his majeſty's ſervice abroad, on the 27th of Auguſt, 1709, and left their horſes behind them, which were ſubſiſted in order to mount another regiment to fill up their room; as the horſes of lieutenant-general Harvey's regiment had formerly mounted a regiment raiſed, and ſtill commanded by the duke of Ormond; on which occaſion the duke had her majeſty's orders only for as much money as would ſupply the charge of the horſes till the regiment was raiſed, which was ſoon after, and then it was put on the eſtabliſhment, as other regiments. But that which was to ſupply the earl of Rochfort's, had not a commiſſion granted till the 29th of April, 1710, and all the pay from the 27th of Auguſt to that time (being above 5700 l.) was taken, under pretence of keeping the horſes, buying new ones in the room of ſuch as ſhould be wanting or unſerviceable, and for providing accoutrements for the men and horſes. As for the laſt uſe, thoſe are always produced

duced out of the funds for providing, cloathing, and the duke of Ormond did ſo: As for horſes wanting, they are very few, and the captains have orders to provide them another way; the keeping the horſes did not amount to 700 l. by the accounts laid before the committee of parliament: So there was at leaſt 5000 l. charged to the nation, more than the real charge could amount to.

Mrs. Lloyd, at firſt coming over, expected the benefit of the box-money; and accordingly talked of ſelling it for about 200 l. but at laſt was told ſhe muſt expect but part of it, and that the grooms of the chamber, and other ſervants, would deſerve a conſideration for their attendance. Accordingly his excellency had it brought to him every night, and to make it worth his receiving, my lady gave great encouragement to play; ſo that, by a moderate computation, it amounted to near 1000 l. of which a ſmall ſhare was given to the grooms of the chamber, and the reſt made a perquiſite to his excellency. For Mrs. Lloyd having an huſ-

He met lieutenant-general Langſton in the court of Requeſts, and preſented a gentleman to him, ſaying, "This is a "particular friend of mine; he tells me "he is a lieutenant in your regiment; I "muſt deſire you will take the firſt op- "portunity to give him a troop, and you "will oblige me mightily." The lieu- tenant-general anſwered, "He had ſerved "very well, and had very good preten- "ſions to a troop, and that he would "give him the firſt that fell." With this the gentleman was mighty well ſatiſ- fied, returned thanks, and withdrew. Upon which his excellency ſaid imme- diately, "I was forced to ſpeak for him, "as a great many of his friends have votes "at elections; but, d—n him, he is a "a rogue, therefore take no care for "him."

He brought one M—y to the duke of Ormond, and recommended him as a very honeſt gentleman, and deſired his grace would provide for him; which his grace promiſed. So M—y withdrew. As ſoon as

Colonel Coward having received pay, for ſome time, in two or three regiments, as captain, but never done any other ſervice to the crown than eating and drinking in the expedition to Cadiz under the duke of Ormond, finding he had not pretenſions enough to riſe, after he had ſold the laſt employment he had, applied to his excellency, who repreſented him in ſuch a light, that he got above 900*l.* as an arrear of half-pay, which he had no title to, and a penſion of 10*s. per* day; but he reckoning this as much too little for his wants, as every body elſe did too much for his pretenſions, gave in a ſecond petition to the queen for a further addition of 10*s.* a day; which being referred to his excellency, he gave him a favourable report, by means whereof, it is hoped, his merit will be ſtill farther rewarded. He turned out the poor gate-keeper of Chapel-izod gate, though he and his wife were each above ſixty years old, without aſſigning any cauſe, and they are now ſtarving.

As for the buſineſs of the arſenal, it was the product of chance, and never ſo much as thought of by the perſons who of late have given ſo many good reaſons for the building of it; till upon enquiring into the funds, they were found to hold out ſo well, that there was a neceſſity of deſtroying ſixty or ſeventy thouſand pounds, otherwiſe his excellency, for that time, could hardly have had the credit of taxing the kingdom. Upon this occaſion, many projects were propoſed, all which at laſt gave way to the propoſal of a worthy perſon, who had often perſuaded the nation to do itſelf a great deal of harm, by attempting to do itſelf a little good, which was, that forty thouſand arms ſhould be provided for the militia, and ammunition in proportion, to be kept in four arſenals to be built for that purpoſe: This was accordingly put into the heads of a bill, and then this worthy patriot, with his uſual ſincerity, declared he would not conſent to the giving of money for any other uſe; as every body thought by the words he ſpoke, though afterwards he ſhewed them, that his meaning was not to be known by the vulgar acceptation of words; for he not only gave his conſent to the bill, but uſed all the art and induſtry he was maſter of, to have it paſs; though the money was applied in it, to the building one arſenal only, and ammunition and other ſtores proportionable, without one word of the militia. So the arſenal was conceived, and afterwards formed in a proper manner; but when it came to be brought forth, his excellency took it out of the hands that had formed it as far he could, and, contrary to all precedents, put it out of the care of the ordnance-board, who were properly to have taken care of the receipt and payment of the money, without any further charge to the publick, and appointed his ſecond ſecretary, Mr. Denton, to be paymaſter, whoſe ſalary was a charge of above five hundred pounds in the whole: Then, thinking this was too ſmall a charge to put the publick to for nothing, he made an eſtabliſhment for that work, conſiſting of one ſuperintendant at three pounds per week, eight overſeers at ſeven pounds four ſhillings a week, and ſixteen aſſiſtants at ſeven pounds four ſhillings a week, making in all ſeventeen pounds eight ſhillings a week: And theſe were, for the great part, perſons who had no knowledge of ſuch buſineſs, and their honeſty was equal to their knowledge, as it hath ſince appeared by the notorious cheats and neglects that have been made out againſt them, inſomuch that the work they have overſeen, which with their ſalary, hath coſt near three thouſand pounds, might have been done for leſs than eighteen hundred pounds, if it had been agreed for by the yard, which is the uſual method, and was ſo propoſed in the eſtimate. And this is all a certainty, becauſe all that hath been done, was only removing earth, which hath been exactly computed by the yard, and might have been ſo agreed for.

Philip Savage, Eſq; as chancellor of the exchequer, demanded fees of the commiſſioners of the revenue for ſealing writs in the queen's buſineſs, and ſhewed them for it ſome precedents; but they not being well ſatisfied with them, wrote to Mr. South, one of the commiſſioners, then in London, to enquire the practice t[illegible]re. He ſent ſent them word, upon enquiry, that fees were paid there upon the like caſes; ſo they adjudged it for him, and conſtantly paid him fees. If therefore there was a fault, it muſt lie at their door, for he never offered to ſtop the buſineſs; yet his excellency knew ſo well how to chuſe an attorney and ſollicitor-general, that, when the caſe was referred to them, they gave it againſt the chancellor, and ſaid he had forfeited his place by it, and ought to refund the money, being about two hundred pounds per Annum. But never found any fault in the commiſſioners, who adjudged the caſe for him, and might have refuſed him the money if they had thought fit.

Captain Robert Fitzgerald, father to the preſent earl of Kildare, had a grant from king Charles the Second, of the office of comptroller of the muſters, during the lives of captain Charles Brabazon, now earl of Meath, and George Fitzgerald, elder brother to the preſent earl of Kildare; which the ſaid Robert Fitzgerald enjoyed with a ſalary of three hundred pounds per Annum; and, after his death, his ſon

George enjoyed it; till my lord Galway did, by threats, compel him to ſurrender the ſaid patent for a penſion of two hundred pounds per Annum; which he enjoyed during his life. Some time ago the preſent earl of Kildare, as heir to his father and brother, looked upon himſelf to be injured, by the ſurrender of the ſaid patent, which ſhould have come to him, the earl of Meath being ſtill living: Therefore in order to right himſelf, did petition her majeſty, which petition, as uſual, was referred to the earl of Wharton, then lord lieutenant, who being at that time in London, referred it, according to the common method on ſuch occaſions, to the lord chancellor and lieutenant-general Ingolſby, the then lords juſtices of this kingdom; who, for their information, ordered the attorney-general to enquire whether the earl of Kildare had any legal title to the ſaid patent, which he in a full report, ſaid he had: And they referred it to the deputy vice-treaſurer to enquire into the nature of the office, and to give them his opinion, whether he thought it was uſeful or neceſſary for her majeſty's ſervice.

He gave in his report, and ſaid he thought it both uſeful and neceſſary; and, with more honeſty than wit, gave the following reaſons: firſt, that the muſter-maſter general computed the pay of the whole military liſt, which is above 200,000 l. per Annum; ſo having no check on him, might commit miſtakes, to the great prejudice of the crown: And, ſecondly, becauſe he had himſelf found out ſeveral of thoſe miſtakes, which a comptroller might prevent. The lords juſtices approved of theſe reaſons, and ſo ſent over their report to my lord lieutenant, that they thought the office uſeful and neceſſary: But colonel P——r, the muſter-maſter general, being then in London, and having given my lord lieutenant, one thouſand pounds for his conſent to enjoy that office, after he had got her majeſty's orders for a patent, thought a check upon his office would be a troubleſome ſpy upon him; ſo he pleaded the merit of his thouſand pounds, and deſired, in conſideration thereof, that his excellency would free him from an office that would put it out of his power to wrong the crown; and to ſtrengthen his pretenſions, put my lady in mind of what money he had loſt to her at play; who immediately out of a grateful ſenſe of benefits received, railed as much againſt the lords juſtices report, as ever ſhe had done againſt the Tories; and my lord lieutenant, prompted by the ſame virtue, made his report that there needed no comptroller to that office, becauſe he comptrolled it himſelf; which (now having given his word for it) he will, beyond all doubt, effectually for the future: Although ſince it hath been plainly made appear, that for want of ſome controul on that office, her majeſty hath been wronged of many hundred pounds by the roguery of a clerk; and that, during the time of his excellency's government, of which there hath been but a ſmall part refunded, and the reſt hath not been enquired after, leſt it ſhould make it plainly appear, that a comptroller in that office is abſolutely neceſſary.

His excellency being deſirous, for a private reaſon, to provide for the worthleſs ſon of a worthleſs father, who had lately ſold his company, and, of courſe, all pretenſions to preferment in the army, took this opportunity: A captain in the oldeſt regiment in the kingdom, being worn out with ſervice, deſired leave to ſell, which was granted him: And, accordingly, for a conſideration agreed upon, he gave a reſignation of his company to a perſon approved of by the commander of the regiment, who, at the ſame time, applied to his excellency for leave for another captain of his regiment, who is an engineer in her majeſty's ſervice in Spain, and abſent by her majeſty's licence: His excellency hearing that, ſaid they might give him a company in Spain, for he would diſpoſe of this here; and ſo, notwithſtanding all the commanders in the regiment could urge, he gave the company, which was regularly ſurrendered, to his worthy favourite; and the other company, which was a diſputable title, to the gentleman who had paid his money for that which was ſurrendered. Talking one morning as he was dreſſing (at leaſt a dozen people preſent) of the debates in council, about the affairs of Trim, he ſaid the lord chief juſtice Dalbin had laid down as law a thing, for which a man ought to have his gown ſtripped off, and be whipped ped at the cart's a——e; and, in leſs than a quarter of an hour, repeated the expreſſion again: Yet, ſome days after, ſent Dr. Lloyd to aſſure his lordſhip he ſaid no ſuch thing. Some time after, while he was in England, he uſed his utmoſt efforts with the queen to turn him out, but could not: And when he came once again, he took an opportunity (when the judges were to wait on him) to ſay to them, particularly to lord chief juſtice Dalbin, that perhaps ſome officious perſons might ſpread ſtories that he had endeavoured to do ſome of them a prejudice in England, which he aſſured them he never had; but on the contrary would always, without diſtinction, ſhew his regard according to merit; which the lord chief juſtice Dalbin was pleaſed to approve of, by ſaying, that was very honourable, that was very gracious; although he knew the contrary himſelf.

In England he bid Mr. Deering aſſure all his friends and acquaintance here, that they and every body might depend on his favour, as they behaved themſelves; with which Mr. Deering was much pleaſed,

and wrote over to his friends accordingly; and, as ſoon as his back was turned, he jeeringly ſaid, "D—n me, how eaſily he "is bit!" When the duke of Ormond was in the government, he gave to Mr. Anderſon Saunders the government of Wicklow caſtle, which has no ſalary, but a perquiſite of ſome land worth about 12 l. per Annum, which Mr. Saunders gave to the free-ſchool of the town; but his excellency, not liking either the perſon or the uſe, without any ceremony, or reaſon given, ſuperſeded him, by giving a commiſſion for it to J——s the horſe-courſer, who lieth under ſeveral odious and ſcandalous reflexions, particularly of very narrowly eſcaping the gallows for coining. Some time after, his excellency landing the ſecond time, he ſent for Mr. Saunders, among others, deſiring their good offices in the enſuing ſeſſion, and that Mr. Saunders would not take amiſs his giving that place to J——s, for he aſſured him he did not know it belonged to him, which is highly probable, becauſe men of his knowledge uſually give away things, without enquiring how they are in in their diſpoſal. Mr. Saunders anſwered him, " He was very glad to find what was " done was not out of any particular diſ- " pleaſure to him; becauſe Mr. Whitſhed " had ſaid at Wicklow, by way of apology " for what his excellency had done, that " it was occaſioned by Mr. Saunders hav- " ing it; and ſeeing his excellency had " no ill intention againſt him, was glad " he could tell his excellency it was not le- " gally given away, for he had a cuſtodium " for the land out of the court of ex- " chequer; ſo his excellency's commiſ- " ſion could do him no prejudice."

Lieutenant general Echlin had pay on this eſtabliſhment as brigadier, until the middle of October, 1708, when he was removed from it by his excellency, becauſe his regiment went away at that time, and lieutenant general Gorge was put in his room. Some time after, major general Rook, conſidering the reaſon why Echlin was removed, concluded, that Gorge could not come on, until ſome time in February after, becauſe his regiment was alſo out of the kingdom until that time; and therefore, he being the eldeſt general officer, that had no pay as ſuch, was entitled to the brigadier's pay, from the time Echlin was removed until Gorge was qualified to receive it, he having done the duty. His excellency, upon hearing the reaſon, owned it to be a very good one, and told him, if the money were not paid to Gorge he ſhould have it, ſo bid him go ſee; which he did, and found it was: then his excellency told him he would refer his caſe to a court of general officers to give their opinion in it, which he ſaid muſt needs be in his favour; and, upon that ground, he would find a way to do him right; yet when the general officers ſat, he ſent for ſeveral of them, and made them give the caſe againſt Rook.

When the proſecution againſt the diſſenting miniſters in Drogheda was depending, one Stevens, a lawyer in this town of Dublin, ſent his excellency, then in London, a petition, in the name of the ſaid diſſenting miniſter, in behalf of himſelf and others who lay under any ſuch proſecution; and in about a fortnight's time, his excellency ſent over a letter, to the then lords juſtices, to give the attorney and ſollicitor ſollicitor generals orders, to enter a Noli proſequi to all ſuch ſuits; which was done accordingly, although he never ſo much as enquired into the merits of the cauſe, or referred the petition to any body, which is a juſtice done to all men, let the caſe be never ſo light. He ſaid he had her majeſty's orders for it, but they did not appear under her hand; and it is generally affirmed he never had any.

That his excellency can deſcend to ſmallg ains, take this inſtance: There were 850*l.* ordered by her majeſty to buy new liveries for the ſtate trumpets, meſſengers, &c. but with great induſtry he got them made cheaper by 200*l.* which he ſaved out of that ſum; and it is reported, that his ſteward got a handſome conſideration beſide from the undertaker.

The agent to his regiment, being ſo alſo to others, bought a lieutenant's commiſſion in a regiment of foot, for which he never was to do any duty, which ſervice pleaſed his excellency ſo well, that he gave him leave to buy a company, and would have had him kept both; but before his pleaſure was known, the former was diſpoſed of.

The lord lieutenant hath no power to remove or put in a ſollicitor general without the queen's letter, it being one of thoſe employments excepted out of his commiſſion; yet, becauſe Sir Richard Levinge diſobliged him, by voting according to his opinion, he removed him, and put to Mr. Forſter *, although he had no queen's letter for ſo doing, only a letter from Mr. ſecretary Boyle that her majeſty deſigned to remove him.

The privy-council in Ireland have a great ſhare of the adminiſtration, all things being carried by the conſent of the majority, and they ſign all orders and proclamations there, as well as the chief governor. But his excellency diſliked ſo great a ſhare of power in any but himſelf: And when matters were debated in council, otherwiſe than he approved, he would ſtop them, and ſay, "Come, my "lords, I ſee how your opinions are, and

* Afterwards recorder of the city of Dublin, and lord chief juſtice of the common pleas.

" therefore I will not take your votes;" and ſo would put an end to the diſpute.

One of his chief favourites was a ſcandalous clergyman, a conſtant companion of his pleaſures who appeared publicly with his excellency, but never in his habit, and who was a hearer and ſharer of all the lewd and blaſphemous diſcourſes of his excellency and his cabal. His excellency preſented this worthy divine to one of the biſhops, with the following recommendation: " My lord, M—— is a very " honeſt fellow, and hath no fault but " that he is a little too immoral." He made this man chaplain to his regiment, although he had been ſo infamous, that a biſhop in England refuſed to admit him to a living he had been preſented to, until the patron forced him to it by law.

His excellency recommended the earl of Inchiquin to be one of the lords juſtices in his abſence, and was much mortified, when he found lieutenant general Ingoldſby appointed, without any regard to his recommendation; particularly, becauſe the uſual ſalary of a lord juſtice, in the lord lieutenant's lieutenant's abſence, is 100*l. per* month, and he had bargained with the earl for 40*l.*

I will ſend you, in a pacquet or two, ſome particulars of his excellency's uſage of the convocation, of his infamous intrigues with Mrs. Coningſby, an account of his arbitrary proceedings about the election of a magiſtrate in Trim, his barbarous injuſtice to dean Jephſon and poor Will Crow; his deciding a caſe at hazard to get my lady twenty guineas, but in ſo ſcandalous and unfair a manner, that the arranteſt ſharper would be aſhamed of; the common cuſtom of playing on Sunday in my lady's cloſet; the partie quarree between her ladyſhip and Mrs. Lloyd and two young fellows dining privately and frequently at Clontarf, where they uſed to go in a hackney coach; and his excellency's making no ſcruple of dining in a hedge tavern whenever he was invited; with ſome other paſſages which, I hope, you will put into ſome method, and correct the ſtyle, and publiſh as ſpeedily as you can.

council for giving his vote in parliament in a caſe where his excellency's own friends were of the ſame opinion, until they were wheedled or threatened out of it by his excellency. The particulars beforementioned I have not yet received; whenever they come, I ſhall publiſh them in a ſecond part.

Bettesworth

Mr. B—ſw—, ſerjeant at law, and member of parliament, a profeſſed enemy to the clergy, having been reflected on by the dean, in a humorous poem, intituled, Brother Proteſtants, &c. and thinking himſelf highly injured thereby, reſolved to be revenged on Dr. Swift, as the author of the ſaid poem. With this deſign he engaged his footman and two ruffians to attend him, in order to ſecure the dean where-ever they met him, until he had gratified his reſentment either by maiming or ſtabbing him. Accordingly, he went directly to the deanry, and hearing the dean was at a friend's houſe *, followed him thither, charged him with writing the ſaid verſes, but had not courage enough to put his bloody deſign in execution. However, as he had the aſſurance to relate this affair to ſeveral noblemen and gentlemen, the inhabitants of the liberty of St. Patrick's waited upon the dean in form, and preſented the following paper, ſigned by above thirty of them, in the name of themſelves, and the reſt of their neighbourhood, viz.

WE the inhabitants of the liberty of the dean and chapter of St. Patrick's, Dublin, and the neighbourhood of the ſame, having been informed, by univerſal report, that a certain man of this city hath openly threatened, and ſworn before many hundred people, as well perſons of quality, as others, that he reſolves, upon the firſt opportunity, by the help of ſeveral ruffians, to murder or maim the Rev. the dean of St. Patrick, our neighbour, benefactor, and head of the liberty of St. Patrick, upon a frivolous unproved ſuſpicion, of the ſaid dean's having written ſome * lines in verſe reflecting on the ſaid man.

Therefore we, the ſaid inhabitants of the ſaid liberty, and in the neighbourhood thereof, from our great love and reſpect to the ſaid dean to whom the whole kingdom hath ſo many obligations, as well as we of the liberty, do unanimouſly declare, that we will endeavour to defend the life and limbs of the ſaid dean againſt the ſaid man, and all his ruffians and murderers, as far as the law will allow, if he or any of them preſume to come into the ſaid liberty, with any wicked malicious intent againſt the houſe or family, or perſon, or goods of the ſaid dean. To which we have chearfully, ſincerely, and heartily ſet our hands.

* On the words brother proteſtants and fellow chriſtians. See that poem vol. VII.

DEAN'S ANSWER.

The dean being in bed, very much indiſpoſed, and not able to receive the ſaid perſons, dictated the following anſwer:

GENTLEMEN,

I Receive with great thankfulneſs, theſe many kind expreſſions of your concern for my ſafety, as well as your declared reſolution to defend me (as far as the laws of God and man will allow) againſt all murderers and ruffians, who ſhall attempt to enter into the liberty with any bloody or wicked deſigns upon my life, my limbs, my houſe, or my goods. Gentlemen, my life is in the hand of God, and whether it may be cut off by treachery or open violence, or by the common way of other men; as long as it continueth, I ſhall ever bear a grateful memory for this favour you have ſhewn, beyond my expectation, and almoſt exceeding my wiſhes.

The

The inhabitants of the liberty, as well as thoſe of the neighbourhood, have lived with me in great amity for near twenty years; which I am confident will never diminiſh during my life. I am chiefly ſorry, that by two cruel diſorders of deafneſs and giddineſs, which have purſued me for four months, I am not in condition either to hear, or to receive you, much leſs to return my moſt ſincere acknowledgements, which in juſtice and gratitude I ought to do. May God bleſs you and your families in this world, and make you for ever happy in the next.

Dr. SWIFT in IRELAND.

To Mr. George Faulkner,

SIR, Neale, Feb. 14, 1750.

I Have at laſt finiſhed what you have often heard me wiſh I might be able to do, a monument for the greateſt genius of our age, the late dean of St. Patrick's. The thing in itſelf is but a trifle; but, it is more than I ſhould ever have attempted, had I not with indignation ſeen a country (ſo honoured by the birth of ſo great a man, and ſo faithfully ſerved by him him all his life) ſo long and ſo ſhamefully negligent in erecting ſome monument of gratitude to his memory. Countries are not wiſe in ſuch neglect; for they hurt themſelves. Men of genius are encouraged to apply their talents to the ſervice of their country, when they ſee in it gratitude to the memory of thoſe who have deſerved well of them. The ingenious Pere Caſtle told me at Paris, that he reckoned it the greateſt misfortune to him that he was not born an Engliſhman; and, when he explained himſelf, it was only for this, that after two hundred years they had erected a monument to Shakeſpear; and, another to a modern, but to the greateſt of them, ſir Iſaac Newton. Great ſouls are very diſintereſted in the affairs of life: They look for fame and immortality, ſcorning the mean paths of intereſt and lucre: And, ſurely, in an age ſo mercenary as ours, men ſhould not be ſo ſparing to give publick marks of their gratitude to men of ſuch virtue, dead, however they may treat them living; ſince in ſo doing, they beſpeak, and almoſt inſure to themſelves, a ſucceſſion of ſuch ſuch uſeful perſons in ſociety. t was with this view that I have determined to throw in my mite.

In a fine lawn below my houſe, I have planted an hippodrome. It is a circular plantation, conſiſting of five walks; the central of which is a horſe-courſe, and three rounds make exactly a mile. All the lines are ſo laid out, that, from the centre, the ſix rows of trees appear but one, and form a hundred arches round the field; in the centre of which I have erected a mount, and placed a marble column on its proper pedeſtal, with all the decorations of the order; on the ſummit of which I have placed a Pegaſus, juſt ſeeming to take flight to the heavens; and, on the dye of the pedeſtal I have engraved the following inſcription, written by an ingenious friend.

Aonidum fontes aperis, divine poeta,
Arte nova: æthereas propriis, ut Pegaſus, alis
Scande demos: æternum addet tua fama co-

Huic memori decus. Hic, tanti quam poſ-ſumus umbram
Nominis in mentem ſacro revocare quotannis
Ludorum ritu juvat. Hic tibi parvus honorum Offertur cumulus. Laudum quo fine tuarum
Copia claudatur qui quærit, gentis Iernæ
Pectora ſcrutetur, latumque interroget orbem.

I have alſo appointed a ſmall fund for annual premiums to be diſtributed in the celebration of games at the monument yearly. The ceremony is to laſt three days, beginning the firſt of May, yearly. On this day, young maids and men in the neighbourhood are to aſſemble in the hippodrome, with their garlands and chaplets of flowers, and to dance round the monument, ſinging the praiſes of this ingenious patriot, and ſtrowing with flowers all the place: After which they are to dance for a prize; the beſt dancer among the maids is to be preſented with a cap and ribbands; and after the dance, the young men are to run for a hat and gloves.

The ſecond day, there is to be a large market upon the ground: And the moſt regular reel and count, is to have a guinea premium; premium; and the perſon who buys the greateſt quantity of yarn, is to have a premium of two guineas.

The third day, the farmer who produces the beſt yearling calf of his own breed, is to have two guineas premium; and, he that produces the faireſt colt or filly, of his own breed likewiſe, not over two years old, ſhall receive a premium of two guineas alſo.—Thus the whole will not exceed ten pounds; and all theſe uſeful branches of our growth and manufacture will be encouraged, in remembring the patron, who with ſo much care and tenderneſs recommended them to others, and cheriſhed them himſelf.

I am, Dear SIR,

Your humble Servant,

LETTER I.

My LORD, Dublin, Feb. 16, 1733.

THE bearer, Mr. Faulkner, the prince of Dublin printers, will have the honour to deliver you this. He tells me, your lordſhip was ſo gracious as to admit him into your preſence, and receive him with great condeſcenſion, which encouraged him to hope for the ſame favour again, by my mediation, which I could not refuſe. Although, for his own profit, he is engaged in a work that very much diſcontents me, yet I would rather have it fall into his hands, than any others on this ſide.

I am juſt recovered, in ſome degree, of two cruel indiſpoſitions of giddineſs and

I hope your lordſhip, and lady Oxford * and lady Margaret †, continue in perfect health. I pray God preſerve you all, for the good of your friends, and your country.

I am, with entire reſpect and eſteem,

And moſt obliged ſervant,

Mr. Faulkner,

I do likewiſe proteſt in the ſame manner, that I did not write the epigram upon * Taylor, nor heard of it until Mr. Pilkington ſhewed it me in manuſcript. Therefore, pray deſire your wagerer from me, to be more cautious in determining on ſuch matters, and not to venture the loſs of his money and credit with ſo much odds againſt him.

MR. FAULKNER,

I DESIRE Mrs. Pilkington will deliver you the papers relating to Gulliver, which I left with her huſband. For, ſince you intend to print a new edition of that book, I muſt tell you, that the Engliſh printer made ſeveral alterations which I much diſapprove of, and cannot ſet them right without thoſe papers.

LETTER IV.

MY LORD, Dublin, Auguſt 14, 1735.

THE bearer, Mr. Faulkner, our famous printer, goes in an hour to ſee Kilkenny and Caſhel, to gather up his country debts. Ten to one your grace may owe him a dozen ſhillings, and your town coffee-houſe (if you have one) a dozen more. But his pretences to me for writing, are the honour of being admitted to your grace by a line in my hand. I am not in fear of his ſhaming me as others have done; however, I would not have you leave your manuſcripts ſcattered about your room, for he would be terribly tempted to beg them, and return them back next winter in four volumes, as he ſerved me; although I never let him touch or ſee one. He has the name of an honeſt man, and hath good ſenſe and behaviour. I have or-

To the Right Honourable Lord Howth.

My Lord, Dublin, August 14, 1735.

THE bearer, Mr. Faulkner, came to me just an hour before he was taking a journey to Kilkenny, and Cashell, and desired I would write by him to your lordship, and the archbishop, only to let your lordship know, that he is an honest man, and the chief printer, and that I know him and treat him with indulgence, becauſe I cannot help it. For although he printed what I never would have done, yet he got the conſent of my friends, and ſo I ſhall get nothing by being angry with him. He hopeth, as a citizen, to be admitted to you lords and ladies in the country, and I am contented you ſhall make him welcome; but take care you put no manuſcripts in his hands; otherwiſe, perhaps there will be the works of the Right Hon. &c. and of my lady and the † giant, neatly bound, next winter. My lady Acheſon hath not been well ſince ſhe left the town; but her mother is almoſt perfectly cured, except the loſs of her eye. I owe my lady Howth a letter, I believe. I deſire my moſt humble ſervice to her and the giant I have time to ſay no more, but, that I am.

LETTER VI.

MR. FAULKNER,

I AM anſwering a letter I had from Mr. Pope, when I was at Cavan. My abſence and ſickneſs, ſince I retired, have hindered me from writing to him. He complains of his unluckyneſs that you could never find him at home, which, he ſays, ſince his mother's death, he is often abſent from. I here will tranſcribe a paragraph which relates to you, and I deſire you will return an anſwer to it, time enough for me to ſend a letter to-night, and I will inſert the ſum of it.

"As to his (Mr. Faulkner's) deſign about my works, I beg you will deſire him to poſtpone it, until he ſees the duodecimo edition of them here, with the firſt volume, publiſhed by Lintot: For, that joined to the reſt by * Gillever, will make the compleateſt hitherto extant, and is reviſed by me. I gueſs they will be out about Chriſtmas."

* Lawton Gillever, a Bookſeller.

Pray let me know what anſwer I ſhall make to Mr. Pope: Write it down and ſend it by any meſſenger, the ſooner the better, for I am an ill writer at night.

I am, yours, &c.

Jan. 8, 1735-6.

I think you may ſend your anſwer by the bearer, for it need not take above two lines.

To Mr. Benjamin Motte, Bookſeller, in London.

SIR, Dublin, May 25, 1736.

I Lately received a long letter from Mr. Faulkner, grievouſly complaining upon ſeveral articles of the ill * treatment he hath met with from you, and of the many advantageous offers he hath made you, with none of which you thought fit to comply. I am not qualified to judge in the fact, having heard but one ſide; only one thing I know, that the cruel oppreſſions of this kingdom by England are not to be borne. You ſend what books you pleaſe hither, and the bookſellers here can ſend nothing to you that is written here. As this is abſolute oppreſſion, if I were a bookſeller in this town, I would uſe all the ſame means to reprint London books, and run them to any town in England that I could, becauſe, whoever neither offends the laws of God, or the country he liveth in, committeth no ſin. It was the fault of you and other bookſellers, who printed any thing ſuppoſed to be mine, that you did not agree with each other to print them together, if you thought they would ſell to any advantage. I believe I told you long ago, that Mr. Faulkner came to me, and told me his intention to print every thing that my friends told him they thought to be mine, and that I was diſcontented at it, but when he urged, that ſome other bookſeller would do it, and that he would take the advice of my friends, and leave out what what I pleaſed to order him, I ſaid no more, but that I was ſorry it ſhould be done here.——But, I am ſo incenſed againſt the oppreſſions from England, and have ſo little regard to the laws they make, that I do, as a clergyman, encourage the merchants both to export wool and wooken manufactures to any country in Europe, or any where elſe; and conceal it from the cuſtom-houſe officers, as I would hide my purſe from a highwayman, if he came to rob me on the road, although England hath made a law to the contrary*: And ſo I would encourage our bookſellers here to ſell your authors books printed here, and ſend them to all the towns in England, if I could do it with ſafety, and profit; becauſe (I repeat it) it is no offence againſt God or the laws of the country I live in. Mr. Faulkner hath dealt ſo fairly with me, that I have a great opinion of his honeſty, although I never dealt with him as a printer or a

I have ſome * things which I ſhall leave my executors to publiſh after my deceaſe, and have directed that they ſhall be printed in London. For, except ſmall papers, and ſome treatiſes writ for the uſe of this kingdom, I always had thoſe of importance to be publiſhed in London, as you well know. For my own part, although, I have no power any where, I will do the beſt offices I can to countenance Mr. Faulkner. For, although I was not at all pleaſed to have that collection printed here, yet none of my friends adviſed me to be angry with him, although if they had been printed in London by you and your partners, perhaps I might have pretended to ſome little profit. Whoever may have the hazard or advantage of what I ſhall leave to be printed in London after my deceaſe, I will leave no other copies of them here, but if Mr. Faulkner ſhould get the firſt printed copy, and reprint it here, and ſend his copies to England, I think he would do as right as your London bookſellers who load us with yours. If I live but a few years, I believe I ſhall publiſh ſome things that I think are important; but, they ſhall be printed in London, although Mr. Faulkner were my brother. I have been very tedious in telling you my thoughts on this matter, and ſo I remain,

LETTER VIII.

GENTLEMEN,

I RECEIVED from you ſome weeks ago, the honour of my freedom in a ſilver box, by the hands of Mr. *Standard; but it was not delivered to me in as many weeks more; becauſe, I ſuppoſed he was too full of more important buſineſs. Since that time, I have been wholly confined by ſickneſs, ſo that I was not able to return you my acknowledgement; and, it is with much difficulty I do it now, my head continuing in great diſorder. Mr. Faulkner will be the bearer of my letter, who ſets out this morning for Corke.

* Eaton Standard, Eſq; then recorder of Dublin, and afterwards made his majeſty's prime ſerjeant at law, in the room of Anthony Malone, Eſq; ſince promoted to the chancellorſhip of the exchequer.

I could

I could have wiſhed, as I am a private man, that in the inſtrument of my freedom, you had pleaſed to aſſign your reaſons for making choice of me. I know it is a uſual compliment to beſtow the freedom of the city on an archbiſhop or lord chancellor, and other perſons of great titles, merely upon account of their ſtations or power: but a private man, and a perfect ſtranger, without power or grandeur, may juſtly expect to find the motives aſſigned in the inſtrument of his freedom, on what account he is thus diſtinguiſhed. And yet I cannot diſcover in the whole parchment ſcrip any one reaſon offered. Next, as to the ſilver † box, there is not ſo much as my name upon it, nor any one ſyllable to ſhew it was a preſent from your city. Therefore, I have, by the advice of friends, agreeing with my own opinion, ſent back the box, and inſtrument of freedom, by Mr. Faulkner,

† In conſequence of this letter there was an inſcription, and the city arms of Corke, engraved on the box, and reaſons in the parchment ſcrip for preſenting him with the freedom of that city.

to be returned to you; leaving to your choice, whether to inſert the reaſons for which you were pleaſed to give me my freedom, or beſtow the box upon ſome more worthy perſon, whom you may have an intention to honour, becauſe it will equally fit every body.

I am,

With true eſteem and gratitude,

GENTLEMEN,

Your moſt obedient, and

Obliged ſervant,

To Mr. FAULKNER.

Deanry-Houſe, Dublin, Jan. 6, 1737-8.

SIR,

I HAVE often mentioned to you an earneſt deſire I had and ſtill have, to record the merit and ſervices of the lord-mayor, mayor, Humphrey French, whom I often deſired after his mayoralty to give me an account of many paſſages that happened in his mayoralty, and which he as often put off on the pretence of his forgetfulneſs, but in reality of his modeſty: I take him to be a hero in his kind, and that he ought to be imitated by all his ſucceſſors, as far as their genius can reach; I deſire you therefore to enquire among all his friends, whom you are acquainted with, to preſs them to give you the particulars of what they can remember, not only during the general conduct of his life, wherever he had any power or authority in the city; but, particularly, from Mr. Maple, who was his intimate friend, who knew him beſt, and could give the moſt juſt character of himſelf and his actions.

When I ſhall have got a ſufficient information of all theſe particulars, I will, although I am oppreſſed with age and infirmities, ſtir up all the little ſpirit I can raiſe, to give the publick an account of that great patriot; and propoſe him as an example to all future magiſtrates, in order order to recommend his virtues to this miſerable kingdom.

I am,

SIR,

Your very humble ſervant,

Mrs. Cæſar was wife of Charles Cæſar, Eſq; member of parliament for the borough of Hertford, who was committed to the Tower of London, Dec. 19, 1705, for ſome reflexions in the houſe of Commons, on the earl of Godolphin, then lord high treaſurer of England. In 1711, Mr. Cæſar was appointed treaſurer of the navy in the room of Robert Walpole, Eſq; afterwards a knight of the garter, who was created earl of Orford in February 9, 1741. This lady was alſo mother to Julius Cæſar, a brave ſoldier, and a general in the ſervice of His Britannick Majeſty in Germany, April 1762. The dean correſponded with this lady, who was remarkable for her good ſenſe, friendſhip and politeneſs, and much eſteemed by the nobility and gentry, and all people of taſte, genius, and learning; for which reaſon we imagine the following letters will not be unacceptable.

LETTER X.

MADAM,

AMONG a few little vexations, ſuch as beggary, ſlavery, corruption, ignorance, want of friends, faction, oppreſſion, and ſome other trifles of the like nature, that we philoſophers ought to deſpiſe; two or three ladies of long acquaintance, and at a great diſtance, are ſtill ſo kind as to remember me; and I was always proud and pleaſed to a great degree, that you happened to be one, ſince conſtancy is, I think, at leaſt as ſeldom found in friendſhip as in love. Mrs. Barber, when I ſee her, is always telling me wonders of the continual favours you have conferred on her, and that without your interpoſition, the ſucceſs of her errand would have hardly been worth the journey; and I muſt bear the load of this obligation without the leaſt poſſibi-lity of ever returning it, otherwiſe than by my beſt wiſhes for the proſperity and health of you and your family: For, in ſpight of all your good words, I am the moſt inſignificant man of this moſt inſignificant country. I have been tyed by the leg (without being married) for ten months paſt, by an unlucky ſtrain, which prevented the honour and happineſs I propoſed to myſelf of waiting on you oftener during this laſt ſummer: And another year at my period of life is like an inch in a man's noſe; yet, I flatter myſelf, that next ſpring I may take one voyage more, when you will ſee me altered in every diſpoſition of body and mind, except in my reſpects for you and all that belong to you. There is one part of Mr. Pope's compliment which I cannot make you, for I could not with the ſtricteſt ſearch find one letter too many in any of your words, although I found a thouſand words too few in your letter; therefore, I accepted and underſtood it only as a billet juſt writ while Mrs. Barber ſtood by in her hood and ſcarff juſt ready to take her leave and begin her journey: And, what is worſe, I ſuſpect that ſhe was forced to ſollicit you long, becauſe ſhe wanted a certificate under your hand to convince me that ſhe was not an impoſtor.

I will not ſay one word in Mrs. Barber's behalf, for ſhe will always continue to deſerve your protection, and therefore ſhe may be ſure you will always continue to give it her.

I hope Mr. Cæſar is in good health, and deſire he will accept the offer of my moſt humble ſervice, with my hearty wiſhes for your whole family.

I am, with true reſpect,

MADAM,

Your moſt obedient, and

MADAM, Dublin, July 30, 1733.

I COULD not let Mrs. Barber leave us for good-and all, without honouring her with the carriage of a letter from your old humble ſervant and conſtant lover: She hath been afflicted with ſo many repetitions of the gout, that her limbs are much weakened, and her ſpirits ſunk; neither can I well blame her, conſidering her grand affair of ſubſcriptions muſt needs have ſlackened in her abſence. Neither could ſhe be in much diſpoſition to increaſe her volumes, for health, and good humour are two ingredients abſolutely neceſſary, in the poetical trade; but, I hope, your countenance and protection will recover her ſpirits, and her hopes, and her genius. I imagine ſhe looks on you as her chief patroneſs; becauſe, although ſhe be abundantly grateful to all her protectors; yet, I obſerve your name moſt often in her mouth. I wiſh it were in my power to take the ſame journey; journey; but neither my health, nor the bad ſtate of my private affairs will give me power or leave: I cannot make ſhift, nor bear fatigues as I uſed to do. To live in England, half as tolerably as I do here, would ruin me. I muſt have two ſervants, and three horſes, and dare drink nothing but wine; and my ragged church rents would never be paid in my abſence. My lord Bolingbroke and Mr. Pope preſs me with many kind invitations, but the former is too much a philoſopher; he dines at ſix in the evening; after ſtudying all the morning until the afternoon; and, when he hath dined, to his ſtudies again. Mr. Pope can neither eat nor drink, loves to be alone, and hath always ſome poetical ſcheme in his head. Thus the two beſt companions and friends I ever had, have utterly diſqualified themſelves for my converſation, and my way of living. Mr. Pope, who had often promiſed to paſs a ſummer ſeaſon with me here, if he outlived his mother, ſoon after her death waved the faireſt opportunity of performing his promiſe two months ago, of coming over with eaſe, and in company of dean *Cotterel and his ſiſter; he ſaid, we ſhould kill him with eating and drinking. I had a very convenient apartment for him in the Deanry-houſe: He would have all the civilities in this town; and Mrs. Barber will tell you that we never want a dozen or more of very valuable perſons, and of both ſexes, with whom to converſe; I chid him ſoundly in my laſt letter for his want of friendſhip or reſolution. You ſee, madam, I am full of talk; but you are to blame, for I imagine myſelf in your company, which is indeed no great compliment; and, upon ſecond thoughts, it is not true, for I ſhould be much better pleaſed to be your hearer. However, I ſhould certainly aſk you a thouſand queſtions concerning yourſelf, and Mr. Cæſar, and your whole family. I have received ſo much friendſhip and ſo many civilities from you both, that I ſhall ever own my obligations; which are much increaſed by Mrs. Barber's feeding my vanity, with telling me, that you did not receive her worſe for her being recommended mended by me; yet, I confeſs, her expreſſions were in ſomewhat ſtronger terms. Pray God bleſs you and your whole family. I deſire you will preſent my moſt humble ſervice to Mr. Cæſar.

I am, with the greateſt reſpect,

MADAM,

Your moſt obedient, and,

Moſt obliged, humble ſervant,

JON. SWIFT.

The

The following letter to the provoſt and fellows of the univerſity of Dublin, plainly ſhews the author's friendſhip to gentlemen of genius and learning, although unacquainted with them; but, ſoon after this, Mr. Dunkin was introduced to the dean, who did him further ſervices, by recommending him to Dr. Bolton, arbhbiſhop of Caſhell, who ordained him for holy orders.

LETTER XII.

To the Provoſt and Senior Fellows of Trinity College, DUBLIN.

July 5, 1736.

Rev. and worthy SIRS,

AS I had the honour of receiving ſome part of my education in your univerſity, and the good fortune to be of ſome ſervice to it, while I had a ſhare of credit at court, as well as ſince, when I had very little or none, I may hope to be excuſed for laying a caſe before you, and offering my opinion upon it.

Mr.

Mr. Dunkin, whom you all know, ſent me ſome time ago a memorial intended to be laid before you, which, perhaps, he hath already done. His requeſt is, that you would be pleaſed to enlarge his annuity at preſent, and that he may have the ſame right in his turn, to the firſt church preferment vacant in your gift, as if he had been made a fellow, according to the ſcheme of his aunt's will; becauſe the abſurdity of the condition in it ought to be imputed to the old woman's ignorance, although her intention be very manifeſt, and the intention of the teſtator in all wills is chiefly regarded by the law. What I would therefore humbly propoſe is this, that you would increaſe his penſion to one hundred pounds a year, and make him a firm promiſe of the firſt church living in your diſpoſal, to the value of two hundred pounds a year, or ſomewhat more. This I take to be a reaſonable medium between what he hath propoſed in his memorial, and what you allow him at preſent.

I am almoſt a perfect ſtranger to Mr. Dunkin, having never ſeen him above twice, and then in mixed company, nor ſhould

ſhould I now know his perſon if I met him in the ſtreets. But I know he is a man of wit and parts; which, if applied properly to the buſineſs of his function, inſtead of poetry (wherein it muſt be owned he ſometimes excells) might be of great uſe and ſervice to him.

I hope you will pleaſe to remember, that ſince your body hath received no inconſiderable benefaction from the aunt, it will much increaſe your reputation, rather to err on the generous ſide towards the nephew.

Theſe are my thoughts, after frequently reflecting on the caſe under all its circumſtances, and ſo I leave it to your wiſer judgments.

I am, with true reſpect and eſteem,

Reverend and worthy SIRS,

Your moſt obedient, and

JON. SWIFT.
